ELICTON, JANUARY 4, 1873.

THE NEW YEAR.

In this our first issue of The Whig in the new year of 1873, we greet our readers with the customary compliments of the season and wish them a happy new year. The Whig was never more prosperous since it was founded, and while old subscribers are generally retained, new ones are constantly added to our lists, the very strongest evidence that our efforts to give the county the best local paper going, while never hesitating to expose abuses and maintain an independence which always maintain an independence which always far as we can make out, it appears that the secures an advocate for the right and a U. S. Senate left the established govern-advocated of promptness in business, and cash payments as far as possible, has borne were adopted. good fruit; and we hope will in the future yield a still more bountiful harvest. While all acknowledge the soundness of the prin ing to hundred of dollars that are marked "dead," it has had the one great advantage of stopping short a numerous retinue of virtual dead heads which cumber every newspaper subscription list that is not pruned with a vigorous hand. Our system of offering all who pay in advance from the first of the year, a premium magazine has been attended with the most encouraging results. The periodicals have been ordered from the publication offices to all roads should be universally fine for travel. roads should be universally fine for travel.

But even this small recompense for a vast outlay is not to be enjoyed by the tax-payers who keep up our Maryland roads. It is lake proved empty and frivolous. The fact is that in New York, where these when the surface becomes dry and hard that the small stones which are scattered over the road beds, are placed in the most favorable condition for rolling under the horses' feet and crunching under the wheels of vehicles. In place of the loose and surface stones being carefully removed from the roads by the supervisors, those which and their way into the side ditches through the season are shoveled back into the middle of the roads with the fine dirt and sand which is removed from the ditches—in place of carting both away—and after a few showers the light soil is washed from the road back into the ditches or swept clear away into the neighboring creeks, and the stones, worn round by the feet of horses and wagon wheels, are left bare to be tumbled about the road by every passing team. We once sknew a distressed in Congress will deal in a manly and fear-ity defects the season are shoveled back into the ditches—in place of carting both away—and after a few showers the light soil is washed from the road back into the ditches or swept clear away into the neighboring creeks, and the stones, worn round by the feet of horses and wagon wheels, are left bare to be tumbled about the road by every passing team. We once sknew a distressed in Congress will deal in a manly and fearsing team. We once knew a distressed supervisor, who was unable to find hands—it being a busy season—to work on the section of road which had been placed under his supervision, and he applied to an old farmer for advice in his difficulty. The farmer told him to take his cart and the press will deal in a manly and fear lies way with this great question, and not allow the annexation project to be defeated to suit the few Liberal malcontents in the Senate and the press. We are against surrendering San Domingo to private monopoly, and in favor of a fair and square annexation. sing team. We once knew a distressed oxen and a boy which he had in his employ, and go over the road and pick off all Had he been furnished with a full force to plow up and shovel loose dirt and stones into the road he would doubtless have succeeded in doing what nine in every ten of the supervisors accomplish; making the road rough and uncomfortable to travel, besides spending a good deal of the public money. We have insisted for many years through The Whig that gravel is the cheapest and best material that we have for making roads in almost every section of this county. Several of the supervisors seem to have become convinced of this seem to have become convinced of this fact, and gravel is now used to a limited extent on several roads, and wherever it is share, sold to R. F. Brattan, Esq., for 70 grounds, and after one trial, have generally william P. Rider, Esq., also offered a lot near town, containing 4 acres, which the defics the action of rain and frost; and needs but comparatively slight repairs in future; while the mud roads are literally mud holes in wet weather and dust banks in dry weather and featful rutty thorough-

But our road system has out lived its time and needs a thorough reconstruction. It is deplorable to have fifty thousand dolong the deplorable the deplora lars more or less annually wasted in a case and the state of the state great measure, under pretense of keeping the roads in proper order; but to spend the Also stock in the E. S. R. R., which was money and have nothing for it than the roads we are compelled to travel on, is a monstrous abuse and nuisance, which should be abated. We can never have good roads till the work is directed by the property sold was literally sacrificed.

True Marylander, Dec. 21st. placed under obligations to do the work according to a specified plan and for a a plan embracing, as its main features the above suggestions was agreed upon, and that it will be submitted in a bill to the next Legislature. A system of really good roads throughout the country—roads which would be pleasant to travel and haul on at all seasons of the year, would add iffry percent in a short time to the value of real estate. The road question is one of vital interest to every land holder.

THE ROADS.

Twice a year we ought to enjoy good roads. In the middle of winter when everything holding dampness and exposed to the frost is hard frozen; and in the midst of a long drought when the surface of the ground is parched dry and hard by evaporation. Then it would seem that the roads should be universally fine for travel. channels of productive industry, Maryland might have turnpike roads from one end to
