AMERICAN SALMON.

STOCKING OUR RIVERS AND LAKES. PROSPECT OF AN ABUNDANCE OF THIS

It is well known that not a great many years ago the rivers of New England and the tributaries of Lake Champlain and ing the proper season of the year, to such sale of rum in our village, but he informed week. From the St. Croix to the Conneccase is very different, the only United Herewith we give you a copy of the Hon. States waters where salmon occur, being a few streams in Maine. The causes of their partial extermination are to be found in the erection of impassable dams, which cut them off from access to their spawningbeds, in the discharge of sawdust into the streams, by which their eggs, when laid, are covered up; in indiscriminate capture at improper times, &c.

Similar experience abroad as to the reduction in numbers of this valuable fish. and the desire to restore it to its original abundance, especially in view of its commercial and economical value, led to experiments for its restoration, and with such success as greatly to stimulate effort throughout Europe. More recently the subject has attracted attention in this country, and for some years past the Fish Comdirected the Clerk to issue license for the sale thereof, in any case in which I had the right to refuse. The Act 1868, chapter 342, is mandatory and leaves no discretion in the Judge, except as to the two persons, householders, to whom the licenses shall be issued. Section 2 is as follows:

"And be it enacted, That the Judge of the Circuit Court for Cecil county, shall before the first efforts were directed to the gathering of eggs in the rivers of New Brunswick, and were not very successful. They then applied to the authorities of the Canadian Salmon Breeding Establishment, at Newcastle, not far from Toronto, and succeeded in procuring a few thousands, at a cost of $40 per thousand every year, after the passage of this Act. sand in gold, a price which prevented their securing a large supply, or one sufficient to make a satisfactory experiment. As may be readily imagined, the young salmon when hatched and placed in the water are liable to be devoured by their fellow inhabitants, and it is only after these have taken their toll that a surplus can be counted on. For this reason, the larger the number introduced at one time, the better the chance of success. Limited as above mentioned, in their efforts to obtain a sufficient supply of eggs for their purposes, the State Commissioners and the leading pisciculturists of the country, at an annual meeting of a Society established by them, determined to ask Congress for aid in accomplishing their object. Their appeal was met by an appropriation during the session of 1871-72, the disbursal of which was placed in charge of Prof. Spencer T. Baird of the Smithsonian Institute, and at the time United States Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries. After consultation with gentlemen interested, and realizing the importance of leaving no effort untried to accomplish the object, the Commissioner determined upon three methods looking toward this end, excluding at the same time any idea of dependence upon the Canadian Government with its exorbitant charges. The first method was found in a plan devised by Mr. Charles G. Atkins, formerly Fish Commissioner of Maine, and practiced by him with much success in 1871. This consisted in securing the living fish (principally by purchase at the weirs and pounds) from the period of their first entrance into the Penobscot river, in Spring, and transferring them to a freshwater pond near Bucksport, Maine, until their spawning season should arrive. About and the eggs stripped from the females when ripe (about the end of October) and fertilized by the milt of the male, the total yield being about a million and a half of eggs. Half the expense of this experiment was borne by the United States, and the limit the sold states, and the limit to be made either at the post office of the contract the sold states, and the limit to be stated from the contract the said states, and the limit to consider the said states which was conveyed unto the said states, and the limit to contract takes effect the contractor shall have on hand, read for delivery, not less than fit with all reasonable dispatch, packed, able to said states, and the less than fit of the said states, and the said states and states are states which was conveyed unto the said states and states and states are states and states are states and states and states are states are states a other half by the States of Maine, Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Rhode Island. It has been a distinguished success, and will, we hope, be repeated on a larger scale during the coming season. The nex extends over a period of more than twenty years, and it source of supply suggested was the Sacramento river, the salmon of which, though of a different species from that of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fee R. R. Atlantic waters is equally good, and has the advantage of thriving in much warmer water, and thus of being fitted for introduction into such States as Pennsylvania Maryland, Virginia, and possibly the Mississippi Valley. To turn this opportunity to practical account, Mr. Livingston Stone, a well-known pisciculturist, was sent to the Sacramento river, and erected a hatchhouse on the McCloud river, one of the tributaries. Misled by the information furnished as to the spawning season of this fish. Mr. Stone arrived on the ground a little too late for the full realization of C his purposes, and succeeded in obtaining only a few eggs. These were sent East, and hatched out at the establishment of Dr. Slack, at Bloomsbury, New Jersey, where, to the number of 0,000 they are now awaiting the period of their transfer to the Susquehanna river, their ultimate destination. They prove to be very hardy, and there will be no difficulty in greatly increasing the number another season. These two efforts not promising a sufficiency, Prof. Baird directed his efforts toward obtaining a supply from Germany, and, on application to the Deutsche Fischerei Verein, was informed that the German Government would give orders to the generous act, and to make sure of an ample supply, an additional 500,000 was ordered from Mr. Schuster, Burgomeister of Freilburg, at the low rate of $2 per 1,000, considerable difference from the Cana dian $40. These eggs were duly packed up by the middle of January last, and delivered to Mr. Rudolf Hessel, an experienced fish-breeder of Offenburg, Baden, who sailed with them on board the Bremen steamer Wewer, which left for New York on the 18th, arriving on Tuesday, the 4th of February. By the courtesy of the officers of the ship, who rendered every facility in their power, the boxes containing the eggs were placed in a small house on deck, where they could be readily attended to by Mr. Hessel. They filled 60 boxes, occupying about seven tuns of measurement. The unprecedentedly warm wether which prevailed in Germany during the last of 1872, and prior to the sailing of the Weser, was very unfavorable to the success of the experiment, as it hurried forward the hatching of the eggs, and rendered them much more delicate than usual. It was, therefore, not surprising to find, on unpacking them, that a considerable number of the eggs had spoiled, though it is hoped that the majority will be saved. As soon as the vessel arrived, the eggs were transhipped to the fish-hatching establishment of Dr. Slack, whore they are now undergoing the necessary treatment .-Whatever be their fate, the experience of the past season will, it is hoped, make further effort a distinguished success.
