without sin was bidden to cast the first in the response of public on proverous and bribe takers, till every government in the land becomes the tool of gigantic corporations, or rings, banded together for the purpose of public robbery. Of all the Investigation Committees, those to examine into the Credit Mobilier charges created the most profound regret and astonishment at the revelations they made.—

Men who had filled the Nation's heart with confidence in their wislom and integrity were found to have been made casy dupes by the adroit management of Oakes Ames. Out of the number of guilty ones two were selected for punishment, but the measure of virtue in the House seemed to be too small even for this effort to appease the demands of justice. The Senate was fruitful in trials for bribery and corruption among its members, but when the charges were entirely proven against Pomeroy, also Caldwell, of Kansas, the nerve was wanting to expel the guilty parties. ELITON. MARCH S, 1873.

End of the Forty Second Congress.
On Tuesday, 4th of March, at noon, the Forty-second Congress came to an end. It has been chiefly notable for the number of Investigating Committees it inaugurated, and the vast system of corruption and bribery which is beginning to play so conspicuous a part in our legislation. If these ivestigations rouse the people to a more rigid exaction of duty from their public servants and a greater care of whom they curtust with political power, they will not have been made in vain. But if such warmings do not serve to rouse popular distrust and a greater care for the future, as well as public indignation at the gross corruption of large numbers of trusted Representatives and Senators, then their exposures will but serves dealed to the representative and bribets This measure which was first proposed
