RELIGIOUS ACTION AND REACTION.

The Rev. Henry Ward Beecher delivered the eighth lecture of his course of 12 before the theological students of Yale College, recently, at New Haven, considering the topic of "Revivals," and answering many of the difficulties which are found in the minds of those that don't believe in them their own communities. Go among the ordinary, said he, the working, the half intelligent, the common-Here and there you will find a shrewd woman, a sagacious and shrewd man; but you take common folks as they are, and my own impression from my acquaintance with them is that there are very few households outside of Christian churches that generate many moral thoughts, religious thoughts, or religious impulses. The higher feelings are extremely weak in them, and if there is to be any way in which you can reach and arouse these peo-ple it must be by something which shall lift the whole community; something in the nature of these revivals of which we

It is said by those who are not in favor of revivals that they tend to run to a wild phantasm. That is precisely as if a man would dissuade us from breaking colts by saying that horses run away. So they do if they are not well broken and well driven, but I never regard that as satisfactory reason. A popular impulse will run away with a community. Revivals of religion sed to the other, if he should survive him. are untamable just in proportion as they are rare. They become mild and amenaand witnessed, and I was requested to take ble to good management just in proportion to their frequency. It is said that the work done by revivals is not to be compared to the work which is done by churches in their ordinary apparel. Do all the people that are brought up in regular church connection turn out well? Are there no failures among the regulars as well as among the militia? I don't think that a man that has been brought into the Kingdom through the instrumentality of the Church is likely to be any better than the man that has been brought in through myself.
