His booty consisted of two trays of cluster-diamond rings, numbering in all forty-eight, and original-ly costing the firm of Duhme & Co., be-tween $6,000 and $7,000. His manner of procedure was as follows: Entering the store at the time specified above, and seek-ing out Mr. Dubme himself, he reminded ing out Mr. Dunne in the state of the state in question. After inspecting a moment, the theif exclaimed: "Oh, by the way, Mr. Duhme, you forgot yesterday to give me a box for my ing." A lady customer and a clerk were then standing near Mr. Dulame either unsuspectingly, or, on the supposition that the clerk would watch the rings, turned his back to the counter, and found his supposed customer gone and the two trays with him. The clerk saw the exit of the thief while the search in the drawer was being made, but not for an instant suspected that his hands or pockets contained so valuable booty. The trays were in size only six inches by nine, and therefore easily concealed.
