SPEECH-MAKING IN CONGRESS.

The style of much of the speaking shows that the prayer-meeting and the play-house have been its nurseries. Those who have taken play-actors as models, are inflated, emphatic and painfully slow. Such members say, "Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to introduce a bill," as if the utterance were a startling truth that had never burst upon the world before. They have the theatrical gags and vulgarities, and say che-yild for child, me for my, with much basso profundo, swelling and posing. Such pretension promises much, and always falls short. Those who have taken the class-leader and the preacher as their models, are also unpleasant speakers. There is, and has been, tendency in certain of the priesthood to run into a nasal sniffling tone in the exercise of spiritual functions, under the mistaken notion that it adds solemnity to the words. This influence is very perceptible in Congressional speaking, and sometimes becomes so marked that we expect a speaker to reach the climax, raise himself on his toes with a tremulous shake and pronounce the "Yea, ver-i-ly" of the Praise-God Barebone of Puritan memory. In the speaking of Congress, it is worthy of remark, that a great body and prominent stomach lend a certain weight to the words pronounced. The dapper man with an insignificant voice is thus at a disadvantage, for let him speak as he will, his words do not have the importance of the man who delivers his over a great abdomen,-150(2165) supposing them to be of something like equal talents.
