Temperance Temperance

WHAT A WRITER SAW
A short time ago I noticed him as he came into town, with his wagon full of vegetables, and chickens, and eggs. He found a ready market for his produce, and I thought how happy his little ones would be when he returned home in the evening with his and dresses, and shoes, and food for the morning, and some clear money in his purse. I thought I would see his wife standing in the doorway, his arms in a cordial greeting, his return, so desirous was I that he should make the home ones happy and contented. I could almost see his cheerful face as he returned to his family after a day's absence. I thought, and I felt, that to my work. But evening came, and he had nothing to show for his day's labor. The bed of the wagon was bare. No little ones, nor food for the morning, nor money in the purse. I felt that the man was drunk. He had chafed, and this changed his thoughts. He thought I could see the child, the wife, the sweet smile, and the mother's arms around him, and the father's hand on his forehead, and the mother's hand on his forehead, and the mother's hand on his forehead.

TEMPERANCE NOTES

CHIEF FACTOR IN NATIONAL DEGENERACY
A wave of degeneracy is sweeping the land, and its development threatens the physical vitality of the nation. Within a period of 50 years the population of the United States increased 230 per cent, while the number of insane and feeble-minded increased 900 per cent.
What is the cause of this degeneracy? A hundred different intermediate agencies may contribute to the undoing of the race, but back of them all stands alcohol as the chief degenerative factor. Statistics compiled by the leading insurance companies, and reported by Sir J. P. Whitaker in a report to the British parliament, show that out of every 1000 deaths among the population at large, 44 are due to alcohol. This is not a mortality from all causes, but from alcohol alone.
