The next day another inspection was fifteen days. made and Milord agreed to take them. The jeweler was delighted. He thought it would be best to ask if he should send them round that evening, but he received a perfectly straight-forward answer. "I I will give you 500f, to close the busiagainst cash in the course of next week." sa he wished to be alone. She had come common place words, but they drew down to tell "papa" that the tailor was waiting the house more successfully than a light for him in the next room and he must go, ming flash of eloquence could have done, and that she was quite sure the jeweler and when the laughter had subsided, M. would like her company better than his; besides, she had a locket she could not and manner that he was "shut up."

The jeweler was not proof against the playing flady he saw of naming a man in after life according to his goods safe, not exactly under his of naming a man in after life according to his personal characteristics, which the soul had no money; the father the fashior of the present Territory of Dakota. It is upposed to be an aurifer on country, and hence the new territory is to be called El Dorado. It is probable that the Pioneer is in need of official advertising.

tion with the young lady. There was something very winning in her ways, and then she was a young bride. The time passed like a dream, and at last the young lady passed off to go and hurry her father. The jeweler sat in meditation; his thoughts were at first all engrossed with the sweet girl who had just left. Then he began to wonder how long his customer would be. Then he went and tried the flap of the drawer. It was "all right;"it was locked. So he sat down and mused again. After some three hours he began to think that he must be forgotten. So he rang the bell and requested the waiter to just remind "Milord" that he was waiting, but do it very politely. The waiter replied that Milord and the Signorina has gone out an hour ago. There was nothing to do but to wait, and wait he did. Neither returned. Table d'hote passed, and although the poor man began to have a presentiment that something was wrong, the landlord was consulted, but was sure that his guest was a real gentleman, whose only sault, was forgetfulness. So again he waited until past the small hours of the night: At early morning the landlord again returned and he also began to think the case suspicious. The jeweler ioto the compartment, and tank back into the arm-chair. He saw before him nothing but a square open yold; leading into the set of drawers in the wait croom! The landlord did likewise, and so did the waiters. Then they sat and looked at each other, and at last ordered restoratives for the jeweler, who had fainted -Vanity Fair (London).
