If there were wanting any conclusive and clinching proof ot this fact the testimony being given before the House Committee at Washington amply furnishes it. We regret that we have not the space to publish it in full, but it may be said in brief that it has been proven conclusively that ex-Gov. man who had lost nearly all his hair after a very severe attack of fever, consulted a French physician of great reputed success as a hair restorer. The prescription given him was a dram of homeopathic tincture of phosphorus to one ounce of castor oil; the bare spot he rubbed two times weekly, for half an hour each time, after the skin of the head bad been thoroughly cleansed with warm water without soap. The treatment was faithfully carried out about six months; the hair soon began to grow, and, in a year from the time of following the doctor's advice, his head was as thoroughly covered as ever, the new hair being about two shades darker than the old.
