The American Farmer. The February number of this time-honored but vigorous farm journal has reached us, full as usual of matter suited to the season and to the needs of our farmers, all of whom would find that a year's subscription to this practical periodical would be money well spent. Not only the staple crops, artificial and home-made fertilizers, but truit and vegetable-growing, improved stock, dairying, poultry, &c., all have due attention, and a number of useful engravings are given, not to fill up space, but to illustrate the sense of the articles. To clubs of five or more the price is only $1 each a year. Single rate $1.50. The publishers are Sam'l Sands & Son, Baltimore.

-The difficulty of obtaining coal at greater depths than those now reached is more formidable than is commonly supposed. It is well known that at a depth of fifty feet below the surface of the earth English geologists mark a zone of equable temperature, the thermometer there showing fifty degrees. Observation shows, too, that this temperature increases at the uniform rate of one degree for every fifty-five feet; so that at the depth of 1:700 feet the temperature is about seventy eight degrees. One mine in England, worked to great disadvantage, owing to the inability of the miners to endure the steady heat. In the colliery the shaft is 2,376 feet deep, and the temperature is ninety-eight degrees, or blood heat, and there prolonged labor is impossible. The limit of profitable mining, therefore, is believed to be about 1,700 feet, and at temperature would, according to this, be not less than 122 degrees, and at 10,000 feet it would be at the boiling point, if not higher.
