-The condition of affairs on the Rio Grande is attracting attention at Wash ington, and threatens to give trouble if the depredations of the Mexican banditti are not curbed by its own Government, the prospect of doing which does not seem at present to be particularly bright. The peculiar character of the country, covered, as it is near the Rio Grande, by dense thickets, through which narrow pathways lead to the farming and grazing lands situated from fifty to one hundred miles from the river, have rendered it almost impossible for any military force which the United States has been able to send there to protect the ranchmen from these constant incursions. Indeed, a large section of the country once covered with immense herds of cattle has become almost depopulated, and the raids by Mexican robbers have been extended to great distances into the interior. Since the adjournment of Congress the condition of affairs on the Rio Grande has repeatedly been brought to the attention of the President and members of his Cabinet, not only by Representatives from Texas, but also by General Ord, who is in command of the United States troops there. The Administration has at length concluded that the time has come when some decided and pronouncek policy must be adopted and the Mexican Government made to underhe is able to capture them with the Evarts shall at once communicate with the de facto Mexican Government through our representative in the city of Mexico, cease at once. The Mexican Minister to prevent the Mexican raids, it certainly is to break up the traffic in stolen property on Mexican soil; and a failure to undertake this will be considered by the Government of the United States as indicative of an indisposition on the part of that Government to do what lies in its power to prevent a continuance of these out-

-A short time since one of the members of a prominent Boston manufacturing firm spent a few weeks hunting in Florida, and on his return he brought with him a monster rattlesnake, the gift of a friend. His snakeship measured about five feet in length, and has a body the size of a man's arm, the white, yellow, and brown cuticle blending rather beautifully in patches of various forms. The heavy triangular head, characteristic of venomous reptiles, has a sinister expression, and in moments of excitement the five rattles on his tail keep up an unpleasantly suggestive whirring, while a forked tongue of inky blackness and surprising length darts angrily from his turtle-like mouth. He is no sleepy, half starved fellow, as may readily be imagined, but wide awake and ready for an encounter of any kind. It was into the knowledge the receipt of the same, and cage occupied by this snake that three inform Mr. Garrett that the Canal Board days since a rather small-sized wharf rat are now and have always been prepared was introduced, in the expection that the to adjust the rates upon some satisfactory rodent would form a meal for the stranger. The snake seemed so, too, for he darted on the unwilling visitor and caught him by the neck. The rat, who had hitherto been running around the cage trying to get out, gave a sharp squeal as he felt the serpent's fangs, and, twisting himself about, buried his teeth in the scaly jaw of the aggessor. The snake writhed and comprehend what had happened the litseemed to be rather more than the Floridian had bargained for, and he dragged feated. Since that time the rat has their just share of State and county lar descent may be taken at 150 feet, the United States Secretary of the Navy flourished in his strange quarters. He capers over the body of his whilom enemy, and avoids the punch of a stick by creeping under the head of the snake. The rat seems perfectly indifferent as regards the reptile, and when the latter, roused to high degree of anger by outsiders, makes a strike at him, he hardly takes the trouble to dodge, and only bites and the rat's immunity from death cannot very easily be accounted for.

engaged in the modern delight of squandering the wealth of her tax-payers on a new State House. There is nothing mean about Illinois-since Logan left the Senate-and so the work of superintending the construction of the new State building was turned over to a commission that knew nothing about it, and the commission turned it over to an architect, who not only knew all about it but was a Frenchman, "educated in the passionate Louis Quartorz school of art." The work has progressed in a manner so satisfactory that the Legislature, as is usual in such cases, has each year appointed a committee to ascertain where the appropriations have gone. It will probably be nothing surprising to say that the investigations have not investigated much, although a few things have been forced upon the attention of the last legislative gree-violently aggressive, revolutionary, committee which it has not been able to stand that this state of affairs, which has dodge. As Mr. Garrett failed to either admit or deny the charge made by President Gorman, of making cut rates against the canal, or to make any specific proposition as a basis of adjustment, it is understood that Mr. Gorman will make some proposition, the nature of which could not be ascertained.
