Regarded, therefore, in the light of the Constitution of the United States and the forms and habits of our political life, Gen. Sherman's declaration that the wholly without excuse, save in so far as it foreshadows a new political departure fitly supplementing a fraud which put into the Presidency a candidate not elected by the people, but unquestionably beaten at the polls.

The most charitable construction that can be put on Gen. Sherman's utterance is that it is an old soldier's convulsive scream for the perpetuity of the army. But Gen. Sherman believes what he says. He spoke with forethought and preparation; for he had been assigned to reply to the regular toast, "The Army." He is the head and representative of the army. His utterance, therefore, may fairly be accepted as the sentiment of the military order; and it furnishes an argument for the abolition of the army, instead of its reduction to ten thousand men merely.

The Sherman doctrine is utterly offensive and intolerable. It upsets and defics the constitutional and popular conception of an American army. The use of this is to overawe, control, and punish the hostile Indians of the Plains, and give protection to the exposed border settlements. That is all. There is no other logical excuse for its existence in a time of peace. But Gen. Sherman, unrebuked by the Fraudulent President, his Cabinet ministers, and the Chamber of Commerce, deliberately turned the army into a political force, made it a part of the civil government of the country, set it up as a machine to enforce compliant civil life, and maintain subservience to the party in possession of power. His doctrine that the army is a necessary element of our politics, would, if accepted, overthrow democratic government in America. It would be the end of State sovereignty. It would be the end of popular sovereignty. It insolently tramples on the conservative force and virtue of our Constitution, our laws, the morality and good sense of the people, their common and mutual interests, their habit of democratic public action, and their patriotism. These are the ligatures that tic the United States together. Cannon are not the foundation of our Union, nor are bayonets and ball cartridges its saviors.

To narrow and shorten the shadow flung over the political future of our country at the Chamber of Commerce dinner, the incoming Congress should without delay reduce the army to 10,000 men. -N. Y. Sun.

-It may startle some of our readers who have been accustomed to think of India as a land of forever-recurring famine, to learn that the Indian export of wheat to England promises at no distant day to make that peninsular continent a formidable rival with our own great West in the English markets. Yet such is the fact. Since Lord Northbrook took off the foolish export duty on grain from India the grain trade from India to England has risen from 144,441 cwt, in 1871 to 3,279,-887 cwt. in 1876. Meanwhile the export from Russia to England has been falling, and India last year sent to England onethird as much grain as Russia and onesixth as much as the United States.
