In the House Mr. Frye complained of Mr. Bland in having obtained the floor on the bill to authorize the coinage of a dollar of 4123 grains, and then to bring forward and pass the bill included in it to restore its legal tender. Mr. Bland replied that the bills were the same, though differing in title.

Mr. Bland in reply to strictures made by the press in regard to the bill, claimed that he had voted just as he did last season, in accordance with the views of Governors Tilden and Hendricks. At the expiration of the morning hour the bill for the repeal of the third section of the Resumption act came up, and numerous amendments were offered.

This, he thought, would bring about a healthy resumption. Mr. Price, of Iowa, argued that the taxation of national banks had driven a great number out of business, but Mr. Kelley said the national banks of Philadelphia had just declared semi-annual dividends ranging from 5 to 10 per cent., and one by way of had declared an extra dividend of 100 per cent., so that the taxation did not prevent banking from being a very profitable business. The subject went over after further argument. Mr. Blount submitted the Naval Deficiency Bill, and would ask for its consideration after the Army Appropriation bill was passed. The House then adjourned.

One of the gentlemen, getting tired, tried as a last resource to get the stag to go on his back, but the stag, who happened to pass by, and observing the danger, once charged the stag, and, having hit the animal a few heavy blows over the head with his hunting whip, succeeded in driving off the infuriated animal. In reply to the thanks which he received, the King only observed: "Well, gentlemen, perhaps it was just as well that I happened to ride this way."

In years gone by it was not uncommon on the Pacific coast for a desperado, in the act of driving a pack of goods, to be that is, driven everybody out of the streets, shoot whoever opposed him, and terrorize the people until his drunken fit was over. Two men recently tried such an exploit in Prescott, Arizona, and found that times had changed. They began by riding down the main thoroughfare on horseback, firing revolvers in the air. Then they scared several women into hysterics, and killed a dog. Thereupon a sheriff and two constables followed them out of the place, and in a fight for their capture killed them both.

In order to ameliorate, at least, the condition of the starving inhabitants of India, to whom some five thousand five hundred tons of food have to be moved daily over the Madras railroads, it is proposed to induce as many as possible of the people in the distressed districts to emigrate to other portions of the British Empire, such as Jamaica, Trinidad and Demerara, where the trouble is a scarcity of population. The Colonial Standard and Jamaica Dispatch advocates the immigration of Indians to Jamaica, on the ground of expediency as well as humanity, and says that, even if the island should become overpopulated, it could never suffer to the same extent as India does, because, even if it were equally dependent on imported food, the fact that it is on an island would permit the landing of supplies as numerous points around the coast, whereas in India the great difficulty of food that is required over regions as large as European Kingdoms. In such immigration a solution of India's labor troubles, which arise not from a superabundance but a scarcity of laborers, might be found.

On Oct. 19 Thomas Castro, alias Oton, the Tinchebone claimant, was removed from Dartmouth to Portsea prison. The reason for the change is in no way connected with the health of the convict, neither has it been made, as reported, in the ordinary course of convict routine. The fact is that Castro did not get on with the prison officials at Dartmouth. He was full of complaints, and was frequently being punished for insubordination. In these circumstances it was determined to try the effect of a change of scene and surroundings. Though he has lost over 100 pounds since his incarceration in Newgate he enjoys good health, and since his removal has even been allowed to work in the prison workshop twenty men who are employed as tailors in making and mending the convicts' clothes, and to the number of these Castro will be added. At Dartmouth he was intrusted with a sewing machine; but as there is only one at Portsea, and that is engaged, he will be compelled to do his stitching with the needle for some time.

The latest kink in cable despatches about the war is the use of the Russian word, "vest," to denote distances. Hitherto, we have had the Russians measured in miles; but now we are told that last week the Russians advanced from Duniok "two versts" nearer to Plevna, while in Armenia Mukhtar, Pasha was pursued "six versts," and the Russian cavalry are now "eighteen versts" from Erzeroum. This is about as satisfactory as the general reader is to have the distance measured by the classic parasang; but it may help matters to say that the verst is 3,501 feet - that is, about two-thirds of a mile.

The sudden death of Mrs. J. W. Gray at Martin's Ferry, West Virginia, is related in an apparently a state of convalescence (having previously suffered from ague) awakened an inquiry which shows that the careless drug clerk has been at work again. While filling a prescription he took up the jar containing aconite, a deadly poison, instead of the buchu, which was in a bottle near by. Shortly thereafter he took the prescription he complained of a burning pain in his stomach. An hour later she was dead, having undergone all the misery and agony that could be crowded into one short hour. Just before her death she was easier for a moment, and recognizing the cause of her suffering and understanding what had brought it about, she asked her relatives not to take action against the prescription clerk nor to blame him for his sad mistake. In New York State prisons there are six drug clerks serving out terms of imprisonment, the offence being criminal carelessness in preparing prescriptions.

There is no need of dime novels in Nevada, where there are real fights like that between Redell and Mille, in Elko. Redell called Mille out to a fight, and said, "We may as well settle this matter now." They used their fists awhile. Then Redell got a revolver from his tent and Mille borrowed one from a friend. Mille's weapon contained only one load, which he discharged into Redell's body. Redell fired rapidly but wildly, and of seven shots only one hit Mille. They struggled together again. Mille then Retell, and, hastily procuring an axe, killed him on the spot.
