CLOTHING

THE BUCKWHEAT CAKE.

My lapjack! 'tis of thee—
Thou that agreeest with me—
Of thee I sing!
Thou that with pork art fried,
Then buttered on one side,
With maple-syrup thick applied—
Thou luscious thing!

Oh! savory morsel mine!
What taste is like to thine,
Well-buttered one?
I love to watch thee fry,
And see cook toss thee high,
And stick thee with a fork, to try
If thou'rt done!

Before the break of dawn
The cook, with many a yawn,
The batter makes,
Then, at the breakfast bell,
Down rush the boys, pell mell,
And all delighted yell—
"Oh! buckwheat cakes!"

Oh! red-faced cook! to thee
Shall loud encomiums be
Forever more!
Soon, when our stomachs feel
Oppressed by such a meal,
We promise you that we'll
Eat somewhat slower.

And when our spirits rise
To dwell in Paradise,
Our hope is this:
A gorgeous throne our seat,
Fair hours at our feet,
Eternal buckwheat cakes to eat—
What greater bliss?

—The Telegram.

An old Baltimore Mansion.

On the 21st of September, 1781, Colonel John Eager Howard, with a number of other gentlemen of "Baltimore Town," subscribed certain sums of money for the opening of Calvert Street. But Colonel Howard attached to his name a proviso very important to this article—for out it, and the determination shadowed, "Belvedere" would be nothing of the past. The proviso was: "In case the street is not extended, though my grounds on

In its comfortable parlors, or in its spacious lawn, the visitors walk where walked in golden times the Revolutionary Williams, Smallwood; Gist and Smith, of the renowned "Old Maryland Line;" Judge Samuel Chase, the life-long friend of Colonel Howard; and Charles Carroll of Carrollton. From the South came Huger, Pinckney, Lowndes and Rutledge; from the North, Adams, Winthrop, and Otis. In Fayette, in 1824, was entertained at the Belvedere.
