The same of the sa

The vicissitudes through which the currency in China has passed have been frequent and violent. The ease with which money is produced tempted various sovereigns, in times of national difficulty, to cein enormous quantities to meet their immediate wants, and so common have been the materials employed, and so rude the technical execution, that coiners have found no difficulty in counterfeiting the imperial cash.

At the present day the trade of coining false money is a large and flourishing one; only within the last few weeks a vessel was captured on the Yang ze-Kisng carrying a full cargo of false to tey. The principal objection to the copper cash as a medium of exchange has always been its cumbrousness, and thus at an early period arcse a demand for a more convenient equivalent. To some extent silver supplied this want, but the introduction of a paper currency proved a still greater benefit to the traveling merchant.

Historians tell us that bank-notes first appeared during the Tang Dynasty (A. D. 622-897), but with the advent of troublous times times they ceased to circulate, and it was not until the Sung Dynasty (A. D. 950-1281) reigned supreme that they were systematically issued and recognized. As in all countries subject to revolutionary outbreaks, the paper currency in China has been subject to extreme fluctuations, and the means adopted by the Government to maintain its nominal value in times of depression have been as unwise and unavailing as any employed in European countries under similar circumstances.

At one time, when paper money had become largely depreciated in consequence of over-issue, the Government, in order to keep it in circulation, ordered that all payments should be made partly Baker in notes, which were to have the same value as metallic money. It is needless to say that this regulation failed in its effect, and almost immediately afterward we find that notes of the nominal value Together with a good assortment of Confecof 1.000 cash were worth in the market | tionery, Fruit, &c. only 10 cash. In addition to the over issue of notes, which has always been the chief cause of their depreciation, the appearance from time to time of large quantities of false notes has added to the pop tiar mistrust in them.

It is curious to notice the similarity between the terms of the penalty to be inflicted on forgers of Coincse paper money with those employed by Western Governments on the first appearance of forged notes in Europe and America. On the notes issued during the Ming Dynasty (A. D. 1305-1643) was the inscription, "Whoever fabricates or uses forged notes shall be beheaded, and he who informs against the forger, or arrests him, shall receive a reward of two hundred and fifty ounces of silver." The Assignate of the French Republic bore au al most identical legend, "La loi punit de mort le contrejacteur, la nation recomponsele denunciateur;" and on the American notes issued during the War of Independence was inscribed the short and emphatic phrase, "To counterfeit is death."

-He was not feeling very well that evening, but before he left he managed to say: "Beatrice, when I look down into your lambient orbs, refulgeat with a more than celestial brightness, I feel myself a very Romeo gazing upon his Juliet, and very Romeo gazing upon his Julier, and rest them upon their own intrinsic merits. am completely lest to the real ration of It is no small praise that many intelligent my own identity." And sie, darling creature, looked up into his face radiant with a beavenly hope, and softly murmured: "Theodore, isn't your headache better now? I should think you would feel wonderfully relieved after getting all that off your system."

- A commercial traveller handed a merchant, upon whom he had called, a portrait of his betrothed instead of his business card, saying that he representd that establishment. The merchant examined it carefully, remarked that it was a fine establishment, and returned it to the astonished and blushing traveller, with a hope that he would soon be admitted into part-

"No, Augustus, indeed I will not; I am no gas-meter," replied she.

-"Piety," remarked an Arkansas preacher to his congregation the other day, "does not consist in noise. The Lord can see you give to the needy as easily as he can hear you pray the root off."

-Isaac Cooper, the last survivor of the crew of the Shannon, the Brittish frigate that fought the Chesapeake, has just died in England, at the age of 86.
