Chromo lithography is simply the art of printing from stone in colors. But still the art is not simple. To reproduce a good painting is a work entailing no small amount of labor, skill, and outlay; for the colors cannot be printed all at once, but must be laid on one by one, now overlaying and mixing with each other, now heightening each other by contrast, and in the end all combining to form one grand and harmonious whole. When we consider that the best of these publications must pass through the press | N. B .- Furniture made to order. Repairing twenty, thirty or even forty times, each impression adding a new color, printed from a separate stone, especially drawn by the artist for the purpose, and that it takes from two to twelve months of unremitting labor to bring out a first edition, we shall, perhaps, be willing to allow that the art is not so simple afte all. From a philosophical point of view, the great value of chromo-lithography is to be found in the fact that it cheapers good art. It has been called the "democracy of art," and justly so. In these days of high prices of paintings it is a comfort for the well-educated, but sleuder of purse, to be able to decorate their walls with such close and conscientious reproductions. Badly-executed prints, gaudily colored by hand, which formerly prined the sight at every ture, have almost been driven out of existence by chromo-lithography; and while newspa-ings the market afforded, they now vie with each other to supply good copies of good paintings, a feat which the chromo alone has enabled them to accomplish.

One of Lincoln's "Little Stories."

'A young gentleman in Tenuessee was once traveling a country road, mounted on a fine black racing horse of great value. His craual companion was a strewd old fellow, who was known in those parts as a Yankee, and rode a racko'-bones of a horse, apparently hardly able to stand on his feet. The Yankee bantered the Southerner for a horse trade, which of course the Southerner indignantly declined. The Yankee however insisted that his was a very remarkable horse, of what was known as the setter breed, which sets for big game as a dog sets for small game, and that as animals of this breed are very scarce, his horse was accordingly valuable. The Yankee soon had an opportunity to demonstrate the truth of his statement, as his horse had the peculiarity of dropping on allfours when touched in a certain spot by the spur or heel of the rider. The Yankee seeing a deer on a knoll not far away, touched his raw-bones in the tender spot, and, sure enough, down he went on all-fours, assuring the Southerner that there was game ahead. The would-be-horsetrader told the Southerner that there must be game nearby, for his horse never 'set' in that way except when on the scent of game. Immediately after, the deer made its appearance to the ¡Southerner, who succeeded in bringing him down, and so much pleased was he with the wonderful instinct of the horse that he immediately Soon after they came to a stream which the Yankee, mounted on the Southerner's tine horse, crossed in good style; then : standing on the opposite bank, he looked back after his companion. The 'setter horse' had sunk, his head being hardly above water; his rider was dismounted and nearly drowned. Reaching the bank and blowing the water from his mouth, he exclaimed: 'Here, you infernal Yankeel what kind of a horse is this to drop on his knees in the mildle of a stream? you there's game there!""
