We issue this week another supplement containing the balance of the laws passed at the last session of the Legislature, which together with the one issued last week presents them all to our readers in a convenient form.

We do not know whether news is scant in the various portions of our county, or whether the warm weather has given our friends and correspondents the spring fever, but for some reason their communications do not come in as briskly as we would wish. We will take it as a favor in anyone who will send us any items of general interest that may occur in their different neighborhoods. We would like to keep the columns of the Times filled with county news, and are obliged to rely upon the assistance of our friends to accomplish that end.

The libel suit of Alexander Hart against the proprietor of the Maryland Republican at Annapolis, terminated in a verdict for the defendant and Mr. Colton is justly gratified at his victory. We congratulate the Republican upon the result of this trial, which establishes the fact that in this matter it did nothing more than the duty of a bold and fearless journal, watchful of the best interests of society to do. A newspaper which justly appreciates its duties, will never wantonly attack the reputation of any man, nor will it be prevented from striking at public abuses, and outrages against the good morals of society, by the fear of libel suits, which almost invariably result in the complete vindication of the paper. If a man who imagines that his "feelings have been hurt" by a newspaper article, can find any consolation therefor by the payment of a heavy bill of costs surely no one will seek to deprive him of his amusement.

Our Baltimore Letter.

Baltimore, May 8, 1878.
The latest novelty we have is of the genuine ghost kind. Perhaps the master of transportation of spirits, who looks after the journeys of souls that leave sunny persons who have been in once upon a time with half of the good and poor people of this city, mistook the bottom of our worthy Mayor, who lies at the point of death, and of recovery in every other bulletin, and sent this committee of three to conduct him to the most of us hope, the place where we all want to go, though they are not a few disappointed seekers, who would like him forever and ever forward to bear additional caloric to the heat of the coming summer. If they do, they will meet each other there, for there never yet a politician breathed who ever went to Heaven. But as the master of transportation has made this mistake in his calculations, his messengers will away the time, necessary for his honor to peg out in, have hied away to different localities to take up their abodes. The first one to show himself to mortal sight necessarily heads the list, yet strange as it may appear, he hasn't a head. He made his appearance in the neighborhood of Fell's Point, a very questionable locality still a ghost, but his head is a very questionable ghost, so you perceive an example of the eternal fitness of things. A certain Mrs. Moore has sprung into mushroom notoriety by being as modestly (?) asserts, born with a caul over her eyes, she has been the first and only one to see his ghostship, and it is on her authority that we know his headless. His ghostship immediately sprang into popular favor in this section, and Mrs. Moore is a grass widow, the rumor circulated that it was old Jim, the husband she drove away, come back to torment her, consequently everybody sympathized with him, and the widow begged his forgiveness. On being cross questioned by her, he confidentially said that he was three other distinct funerals and forgotten ones. This becoming known to the crowd of admirers, he fell at once into disrepute. No ghost, who can stand in that moral (6) neighborhood. Things began to grow interesting; some were for expelling him, others for giving him another chance to redeem himself. Just at this time one of his companions turned up the colored children, Hopkins' Institute for the colored children, as he was an advocate of the fresh air theory, as every night he throws all the doors and windows open. Of course every one was going there, but before they were fairly started the third one turns up. In his mortal days he must have been a communist or an anti labor saving machinery man, he walked to work on a bicycle on Lexington street through a sewing machine out of a third story window without notifying the owner. That was the last straw, my pen cannot depict the scenes that followed this announcement. The public is aroused. We can bear with a headless one and a fresh air theory one, but when one and a half are invaded and one sewing machine of other kind are thrown out of the windows, why no American man is going to put up with it; and as much as we love our Mayor, he is respectfully requested to die or detail a strong force of men, preferring those born with a caul, to put a stop to their freaks.

SCIENCE REPEATING ITSELF.
Through the mouth of the Rev. John Jacob Jaeger, colored, of Richmond, the scientific discoveries of the ancient ancients, are being once more discussed. He does not reason by the laws of attraction, gravitation or any other scientific supposition; but backs his assertions by Biblical quotations, when he declares, "That de sun do moves, an de earth an flat square, 'cause de post, John saw in de which it bides." In the Hebraic column is given the general aspect of the sky during the day.

Bright colored picture pasted on sundry brick piles and wooden fences, representing legions of known and imagined beasts and reptiles, told us two weeks ahead what we could expect, and truly the fertility of resource displayed was worthy of the genius who wrote the adventures of Baron Munchausen. Here are ventures, flying high in the air from rope to rope; right beside of them a monster whale and a sea lion are engaged in a deadly combat, their tails lashing the waters of the sea into foam. There is a big rhinoceros with great fangs, galloping through the wilds of Africa's jungles after a renegade hunter, the most of which are not making his escape, eld in a pair of red pants. Next comes one of our western prairies, an immense plain of green grass, relieved of sameness by a life size picture of a wild buffalo in distress. With lowered head, blood shot eyes and dilated nostrils, he thunders across the prairie (I nearly forgot to mention the plumed feathers of three or four arrows half buried in different parts of his body), behind the fugitive a noble red man comes. Seated upon a mustang, the aborigine is dressed in full regalia and is about to dispatch another arrow; the equine of his eye being admirably depicted by the artist. The next picture transports us back to Africa; for in the foreground looking at the huge trees, the tangled masses of vines, the bright colors of the plants, the monkeys hanging by their tails, clapping their hands, the parrots and bright plumaged birds, the huge serpents of black and gold twining around the trees; and wonder at the resemblance. Other pictures equally as gay and attractive depicted the advertisement of Campbell's Great Six Shows combined in one circus. We went. How could we be mortal and resist? There is a charm about them that is irresistible. There is a relief about them that transports us with joy, like the soft melody of a bell, but forgoes the time that evidently floats to memory, we beat against the current and glide back to the loved landmarks of youth, when our hearts quivered and our eyes brightened, when encore on encore greeted the witty sallies of the clown, or the daring leap of the rider, and the youthful heart was undisturbed which, a clown or rider, for it was fully recalled. As how pleasant it is to shut the eyes and recall with an amused smile, the various hopes, ambitions and plans, we map out in boyhood; but we are wandering and offer as a peace offering the words of the poet.

"Oh! memory, oh! memory,
I would go mad, were not for thee;
For when my strength is ebbing low,
I gain new strength, yet who can tell,
Or describe the thoughts that swell
Within his soul, when he doth dwell
Upon the scenes of his long life,
When memory shows its pantomime."

Well as we said, we went and were disappointed. Circuses, like mankind, are degenerating. It was poor, it was miserable, our faith in circuses is shaken. I shall drop the subject, it is becoming painful; there are some things we never wish recalled. I shall only speak of the one poor, and only one, who is if there is anything a monkey. If they don't own 'em they borrow or hire them from the resident organ grinders, giving each son of Italia, a family complimentary. Standing in front of the one poor, lonesome monkey, we asked "why is an organ grinder and a monkey like Damon and Pythias?" and gently we were ashamed to do it. We pined this companionless creature, and ruminated on his prospects, and then we thought of Prof. Darwin, then we thought suppose it is as asserts, we are descended from monkeys, then Adam must have been a monkey, and God made Adam in his own image. Why don't you see what I am driving at? Those old heathens were 'so far wrong in making their Gods so hideous. Were they?

Edison, the Inventor.

Hearing that Mr. Thomas A. Edison, the world-famous discoverer of the phonograph, has arrived at the Smithsonian Institution with a specimen of his instrument, a reporter, then on duty there, hurried from the monologues of the savants to have an interview with the most wonderful inventor of the world. Catching a glimpse of him, the reporter followed him to the outside, where the great discoverer was found looking intently around him, apparently interested in a study of the tree the shrubbery and the blue sky. Suddenly he darted off, as if determined to more closely examine a specimen of the white pine that springs from the curved top of one of the walks. He is rather under the medium size, about five foot seven or eight inches high, as if tired of a long walk, his hair is thick, soft, yet wiry, of a chestnut-brown hue, and the face is bare of beard. His eyes are grayish-blue, clear and bright, and in conversation brighten wonderfully. The nose is large, standing out boldly from the face, just as if looking into the future for its unconscious nose, but not an atom of a mole is to be seen. His mouth is a pleasant one, a square rather prominent chin and a white skin, complete the facial description. His manner is quiet, modest and retiring, exhibiting a lack of egotism or assurance at once refreshing and marvelous in a man who has and his achievements. Yet while he is tremendous potencies in the pleasant-voiced gentleman before you. "Good morning, Mr. Edison," said the reporter, "handsome grounds these."

"Yes, what an immense stretch of telegraph wires without a support," he said, pointing to the net work of wires running high in the air from the Smithsonian. "I have been wondering where they reach, but when I went over to that tree just now I could see no more than I do here." Naturally enough the inventor has no eyes for trees or flowers where telegraph or telephone wires are concerned. "Let me, I will all the rest of the world, congratulate you on your discovery of the phonograph," said Edison. "The inventor, who is slightly deaf, blushed like a girl and silently bowed his acknowledgments. "Were you a long time in perfecting the discovery?" "Oh no; I had thought of the idea vaguely many times, long before I undertook to work it out. The idea occurred to me in a sudden, indefinite way many years ago, but when I came to realize it, and make it practical, it came out all right very easy. It is a very simple idea when you come to look at it, and the wonder is it wasn't discovered before."

"It waited for Edison, and when he came it stepped into the slave of his genius." The compliment was doubtless pleasing, but the innate modesty of the man caused him to shrink from hearing his own praises. "What a pity you hadn't invented it before. There is many a mother mourning her dead boy or girl who would give the world could she hear his voice, or could she see his face, or could she see his eyes, or could she see his hands, or could she see his feet, or could she see his hair, or could she see his nose, or could she see his ears, or could she see his mouth, or could she see his teeth, or could she see his tongue, or could she see his
