His monotheism has probaly not injured him, but the fatalism, fanaticism, and sensualism that have come from his acceptance of Mohammed as the one prophet of the one God, have placed him him. Monotheism, as taught by Mohammed, and held by the Turk, forms the basis of a civilization which cannot possibly stand before the aggressive force of a nation which builds upon Christianity -though most incompetently and unworthily. Of course the Turk will not see this, and cannot be brought to admit it, but the world sees it and ought to learn its lesson from it. One nation has abreast of the best civilization of the world. It is sympathetic with freedom and education. The other learns nothing. It sees nothing worthy outside of itself, and is as savage to-day -as remorseless and sensual and intolerant -as in the days of its pride.
