When it is to be brought into use by a gang of burglars, each man carries a portion. By this but detection is made more difficult. These jimmies are constructed of the fivest steel. The principle work of them is the threading and fitting of the nuts, the latter being a very arduous job, that requires considerable ingenuity. The finest jimmy I ever saw is the one or which you have a diagram, which is six feet long. It was left at the Ocean Bank, at the corner of Greenwich and Dey streets, when the unsuccessful attempt was made to 'crack' it in 1870. Then there are ilmmies for store work, a trifle different in construction, having only two sections, likewise the short pry. This latter instrument is meant for what is termed 'hot work;' it is a tough tool, but not so much leverage can be obtained with it as with the larger one. Take wedge end into a safe, and Dan Kelly, the noted cracksman, at the other end, and the safe has got to go. The smaller jimmies, that range from six to eighteen inches long, are used principally for sneakknives. Jimmies cost from $2.50 to $100, according to the work on them,"

"How is the jackscrew used?" "The jackscrew is generally used by bank burglars in breaking through adjoining walls, litting and moving safes, and ofttimes for driving a wedge into a sale. and its lifting power is enormous. In one instance, a burgtar has been known to move a large-sized safe sixty feet in three hours.

"A kit of bank burglers' tools is a teror to all bank officials. When an entrance is once effected into a bank, and the kit is placed in operation, the safe is hole in the safe; the nut is then inserted, and by means of the drill, which is
