

Short Words.

Hon. Horatio Seymour spoke before the New York School Commissioners at Utica last February, on "The Use of Short Words." He made his meaning clear by using only very short words in his speech. One good point was made by him when he said:

"Crime sometimes does not look like crime when it is set before us in the many folds of a long word. When a man steals and we call it defalcation, we are at a loss to know if it is a blunder or a crime. If he does not tell the truth, and we are told that it is a case of "prevarication," it takes us some time to know just what we should think of it. No man will ever cheat himself in a wrongdoing, nor will he be at loss to judge of others, if he thinks and speaks of acts in clear, crisp terms. It is a good rule, if one is at loss to know if an act is right or wrong to write it down in a short straight-out English. In other words," he said, "we gain by the use of short words.—They show that we know and mean what we say, and thus have weight with those who hear us; and they kindle in other minds the feelings which move us. No one, who means in a deep strong way what he says, ever pauses to unfold long words of Greek or Latin origin, nor speaks in a round-about way. Rage and fear strike out their terms like the short crack of the rifle, when it sends its bullet straight to the point. The fact that they come to our lips is strong proof that we know and feel what we talk about."

"On the other hand, when we try to tell things too great for the mind to grasp, we fall into the use of great long-winded phrases. Love, nor hate, nor zeal ever waste their force by the use of involved or long-winded phrases. Short words are not vague sounds which fill us as they fall upon the ear. They have a clear ring, which stir our minds or touch our hearts. They best tell of joy or grief, of rage or peace, of life or death. They are felt by all, for their terms mean the same to all men. We learn them in youth. They are on our lips through all days, and we utter them to the close of life. They are the apt terms with which we speak of things which are high, or great or noble. They are the grand words of our tongue; they teach us how the world was made. God said 'Let there be light and there was light.'"

Don't.

Don't judge a man by the clothes he wears. God made one and the tailor the other.

Don't judge him by his family connection, for Cain belonged to a very good family.

Don't judge a man by his failure in life, for many a man fails because he is too honest to succeed.

Don't judge a man by his speech, for the parrot talks and the tongue is but an instrument of sound.

Don't judge a man by the house he lives in, for the lizard and the rat often inhabit the grandest structures.

Don't judge him by his activity in church affairs, for that is not infrequently inspired by hypocritical and selfish motive.

Don't judge him by his lack of display, for the long-eared beast is the humblest of animals, but when aroused is terrible to behold.

Don't take it for granted that because he carries the contribution box he is liberal; he often pays the Lord in that way and keeps the currency.

—Some of these beautiful evenings a man with a wilted collar and a sprinkled coat will mutter an old-fashioned bit of profanity between his teeth; he will send swift across the street; he will pick up the boy that is manipulating the sidewalk hose; he will twist his head around five times; he will jam his head into a crack in the fence and kick his whole body through after it, and then the boy will learn that it is not right nor safe to glue his eyes into the top of a tree while he sprinkles the streets, the sidewalks and the citizens, indiscriminately and impartially. Mind, we do not advocate the reckless, extravagant or wanton killing of boys, but these are revolutionary times and the temper of a down-trodden people is restless and unsafe.
