HORNER'S FERTILIZERS for sale by D.

Baltimore.

Of the number of persons in the laboratory, remark principally the one you may have least thought of selecting, from the informality of his appearonce. The rest are but skillful assistants, to whom he is able to commit some experiments in their secondary stages. It is a figure of perhaps five feet nine in height, bending intently above some detail of work. There is a general appearance of youth about it, but the face, knit into anxious wrinkles, seems old. The dark hair, beginning to be touched with gray, falls over the fore nary, "ready-made" order. It is Edison. He has the air of a mechanic, or more definitely, with his peculiar pallor, of a night-printer. His features are large; the brow well shuped, without unusual developments; the eyes light gray; the nose irregular, and the mouth displaying teeth which are also, not altogether regular. When he looks up his attention comes back slowly, as if it had been a long way off. But it comes back fully and cordially, and the expression of the face, now that it can be seen, is frank and preposs-

from his tasks.

The Woman Who Charms. There is in this world no function more important than that of charming. The forest glade would be incomplete without the humming-bird. To shed joy around, to radiate happiness, to cast light upon dark day, to be the golden thread of our destiny, and the very spirit of grace and harmony, is not this to render a service? Does not beauty confer a benefit upon us even by the simple fact of being beautiful? Here and there we meet with one who possesses that fairy-like charm of enchanting all about her. Sometimes she is ignorant herself of this magical influence, which is, however, for that reason only the more perfect. Her presence lights up the home; her approach is like a cheering warmth; she passes by and we are content; she stays a while and we are happy. To behold her is to live; she is the Aurora with a human face. She has no need to do more than simply to be; she makes an Eden of the house; Paradisc breathes from her; and she communicates this delight to all without taking any greater trouble than that of existing beside them. Is it not a thing divine to have a smile which, none know how, has power to lighten the weight of that enormon, drag behind them? -A clever mot of Gounod's is told apropos of a lady who begged to be allowed to go to a rehearsal of his new opera,"Polycucte." "Come and dine with us, Madame," said the composer; "we will be delighted to see you; only don't go into the kitchen before you come to the dining-
