-- Mr. Bayard Taylor's opinion of the American novel is quoted by a writer in the Boston Courier: "I have heard 'Hannah Thurston's called the great American novel," said the latter. "So have I," answered Mr. Taylor, "but it isn't. The great American novel will never be written, for our civilization is too crude and too various. It is not homogeneous. You see it in one way; I see it another; our friends in the West see it in a very different way. Great books will be written, on a principle, or a state of violent tumult, or a political change, but there can he no positive picture of American society, because there is no positive society.
