just and pretty compliments:

There is perhaps nothing of national interest in the message of the Governor of Delaware, of which we print a full synopsis, but it is a very simple and straight-I rward statement of the affairs of a State which, despite the sarcasm which is sometimes nimed at it on account of its size, manages to give its people as good government at as little cost as any commonwealth on earth. It is a State also in which the thought or suggestion of peachment. If anybody was "swift" it maneial dishoner would not be entertained by a single decent citizen. As a story of good government in this era of ill government it strikes us as well worth publishing, especially as it is that of the me State in the Union which has been for years unanimously Democratic in every department of its government, having not a single Republican in its Legislature or in any State or county office within its borders.
