those days of wit and experience. He had his Boswell (not, indeed, a personage of unique as the Scotchman who devoted his life to Johnson, and who was at once so supremely ridiculous and so signally A. M. successful) in an amanuensis, one Richard Milward, whom he engaged during the last few years of his life, and who noted down some of his patron's comments on men, things, and social institutions. The collection was published some years after Milward's death, under the title of "Selden's Table Talk," the title being taken from that voluminous folio in which Luther's conversation is said to be recorded. The book has its detects as well as its merits. The notes are often taken hur- 12.15 Washington, Annapolis and Way Sta riedly, and even carelessly. Some of the memorabilia have no point, a few are almost unintelligible. But, on the other hand, all are genuine attempts to reproduce conversations which Selden never thought would be recorded. Most indirectautographies are suggestive of posture. Johnson knew what Boswell was about. Pope wrote every letter under the conviction that it would be published. The people whom Senior met knew all about his journal, and occasionaly, it seems, ! talked to order. But Selden's conversation was inpromptu. By far the largest part of the ana of
