Indirect taxes every man may avoid by frugality in his domestic expendiindulgent or self-denying, the tax gatherer wants 79% cents on every $100 he owns, and it must be paid. These local taxes, so enormous in comparison with all others, are largely within our own control. We can determine for ourselves how much we will levy, and in what manner we will expend it; how much we require for roads; how much for bridges; what for paupers and for pension-ers; what just or what profuse allowance we ish our school funds, and what rates of salaries we shall pay to teachers.
