CARRIED MESSAGES.

MESSENGER BOYS WHO HAVE AC-QUIRED FAME AND WEALTH.

Messrs. Carnegie, Oliver, Pitcairu, Mc-Cargo and Moreland Were Youngsters in a Pittsburg Telegraph Office Together-How They Were Promoted.

The story of five messenger boys begins in the early days of telegraphy. In a dingy office in Pittsburg, about 1848, Andrew Carnegie, Henry W. Oliver, Robert Pitcairn, Major William C. Moreland and David McCargo were messengers. It is said that they took the opposite of other boys and spent their spare moments in learning useful lessons. Andrew Carnegie is the oldest of the lot, and he was the smartest, leading all in learning how to telegraph. He was one of the first operators in the country to learn to take the Morse system by sound, which in those days was considered a remarkable achievement. It did not take Thomas A. Scott long to snatch Mr. Carnegie from the telegraph office in Pittsburg into his office as private secretary when the great railroad genius took charge of the Pittsburg end of the road. The education the young Scotchman received from a greater mind lifted him from a secretary's seat into the place of division superintendent when Mr. Scott was made vice president of the railroad. The industry, the subtle cunning and watching faith of Scott taught him to lay his lines in other directions than watching the divisions of a railroad, and Scott helped him. His place gave him the opportunity to look into other lines of industry, and he drove a drift into an iron mill. His pickax was not large, but his cunning and thrift made up for the size of his ax. J. Edgar Thomson, who was the president of the Pennsylvania railroad, then gave a great name and money to the works now dominated by Mr. Carnegie. At that time Colonel Scott was a power in the nation as well as the railroad, and Carnegie began to gather wealth.

MR. CARNEGIE'S EARLY AMBITION. "My ambition in those days," he said recently, "was to write for newspapers. I took in material in that direction whenever it was possible. I haunted the public library in Alleghany, and caught on to the fact that a distinction was made by the attendants between the poor boys and the sons of well to do parents. It made me indignant. I wrote my first public letter to the board of control, and a change was ordered. This result more than ever resolved me to follow journalism, but an accident drifted me elsewhere, and I became a manufac-

Thrift and industry were the derricks which lifted Harry W. Oliver out of the telegraph chair next to Mr. Carnegie. and made him a clerk for a big iron firm. He is an Irishman, with a head full of cunning about the business economies of life. It did not take long for him to realize the possibilities of the iron trade, and one day a slick working block and tackle hoisted him out of his seat at the desk in the big firm's workshop and landed him in a business that has since grown to be one of the greatest concerns in the world. He has grown very rich, and one railroad and seven manufacturing concerns now feel the touch of his

Another Scotchman of the famous five s Robert Pitcairn, who sits in the seat once occupied by Colonel Tom Scott and Mr. Carnegie. He went from a telegraph chair into the railroad business, and he has been a master in all the best conditions of railroad life. He is many times a millionaire, but he lives for his railroad, although interested, like Mr. Oliver, in many large manufacturing cuterprises. He does the work of about three men every day, and takes recreation only when he wants to talk with a big friend or indulge with his countrymen in the melodies of Scotland. He has denied himself promotion many times, because he likes to cling to the location where he began as a messenger boy and has had so many triumphs.

A TRIUMPH IN TELEGRAPHY. The fourth member of the group is David McCargo, the general manager of the Alleghany railroad. His strong Scotch character lifted him into big railway concerns early. He left the telegraph office soon after the other boys and took a place on the railway.

"Think of it," said Major William P. Moreland, the last, but not least, of the famous five. "I stood at the key with Carnegie, Oliver, Pitcairn, McCargo, and heard the first message pass over the wires that was sent between the north and south. James D. Reid, who was general superintendant, it mid Brooks, now living in Philadelphia, and Jackson Duncan, of Cincinnati, had (charge of be experiment. We had to work on sort circuits in those days, and we tlought it was impossible to send a mesage to New York from New Orleans.

Brooks and Reid walked over and inspected the line from the Crescent City to Pittsburg. After arrivin here and assuring themselves that the line was perfect, the effort was ordered and every telegraph operator on the line, and in fact the whole country, was waiting in suspense to know the success or failure of the effort. Every magnet was adjusted, and every electrician on the line stood at his key listening for the result. At the signal New York called Philadelphia, the Quaker City signaled Harrisburg, and then in quick succession Pitts burg, Cincinnati, Louisville and New Orleans were opened to the metropolis No one drew a breath scarcely until the tick came, and in a minute an unbroken message was sent between the north and south. That may seem primitive in these days, when there is no measuring electric power; but then it was the talk of the nation. This is a bit of untold history; but I shall never forget that hour."-New York Sun.

Peculiar Roses. One of the wars of the roses, the fierc est and deadliest of them all, was fought on a field where, curiously enough, a rose peculiar to the spot grows or used to grow. It is a rare plant now, and the reason is explained by Mr. Leadman in his account of Yorkshire battles. After describing the terrible battle at Towton on Palm Sunday, 1461, he says: "I cannot conclude this story of Towton field without an allusion to the little dwarf bushes peculiar to the 'Field of the White Rose and the Red.' They are said to have been plentiful at the commencement of this century, but the visitors have taken them away in such numbers that they have become rare. Such vandalism is simply shameful, for the plants are said to be unique and unable to exist in any other soil. The little roses are white, with a red spot on the center of each of their petals, and as they grow old the under surface becomes a dull red color."-London

There have been many ways suggested for blanching. It is said that in the Old World, where first class celery is desired, instead of burying up the plant in the earth they simply tie up the leaves and then wrap them in coarse brown

KEEPING BOARDERS.

The Boarding House Woman's Side of

Much Mooted Question. A woman, driven by the vicissitudes of life to throw her home open to boarders, finds the experience, as most other women who try it do, difficult, to say the least. But she says philosophically: "I am learning human nature. I have discovered that the soft voiced, refined looking woman often carries tigerish claws beneath her velvet, and that the frank looking, well dressed man may develop into a 'Meddlesome Matty' before my eyes. I don't know why humanity should become brutal when it essays boarding, but it seems to. A woman called recently, liked my apartments, and returned to the parlor to 'talk business,' as she said, with an engaging smile.

"Business' meant a series of search ing, relentless questions and exactions which set my cheeks affame and filled my eyes with hot tears of mortification. Did I intend purchasing a new carpet for the parlor? Were my stairs and halls usually kept somewhat cleaner than they appeared that day? Were my beds clean? Did I have two kinds of meat for dinner? Use homemale bread entirely, and, finally, did a maid open the front door as a rule? This was a gratuitous imperti-

"I was taking the letters from the postman as she came up the steps, and naturally received her. And then she went away, after taking three names as references. I insisted in turn that she should give me one, that of a former landlady, and it was one of the small compensations of my lot, when she wrote me a week later that she found my references satisfactory and would take the rooms, to reply that I had found her reference most unsatisfactory and was sure I could not tolerate her exactions. "A man came to me the other night, and after forcing my price down as low as he could, asked me if my husband church and Sunday school, if my other boarders were God fearing people, and if Sunday was observed with religious quiet by everybody in the house. "People ask me to take them cheaply because they are saving to buy a home or because the husband has extra office expenses or, as one gushing creature told me, because we want to go to Europe less they want to pay. Look at the advertisements for 'board wanted,' 'everything unexceptionable,' and 'terms mod-

"Would these people think of going into a shop and saying, 'I want your most expensive goods at a low price? Yet they do precisely that with me. Surmean a serious outlay they demand and are not willing to pay for. They cannot afford to keep up an establishment to their liking, and they ask me to do it for them without adequate compensation. The average man or woman seems to part with his courtesy, sense of justice and humanity when he starts out to become a boarder."—Her Point of View in New York Times.

The Neglect of the Feet. Far too little has ever been said or written regarding the proper treatment of the feet, when we consider the amount of suffering that may be occasioned by their abuse. As the health of any and all parts of the body depends upon the care taken of each, either voluntarily or unconsciously, it is a marvel that the feet are not even more frequently disfigured by growths that injure the entire system and, perhaps, permanently cripple the limbs. Races that live in a state of nature have almost invariably (except in case of accident or natural deformity) shapely and serviceable feet in proportion to their general comeliness and physical perfection: therefore, it must be the coverings placed by civilized man upon his fects in this direction. If our hands were thickly clad in firm, tight fitting skins and fabrics for eighteen hours in every twenty-four they would soon become, to quote Ruskin, "as ugly as the naked feet of prosperity." When thus surrounded by coverings that are well nigh impervious to the air, the pores of the feet do not act properly and become unhealthy, while the feet themselves grow callous and develop those ill natured and wondrous painful excrescences known as bunions and corns. - Delineator.

One-third of a Dollar. Handed down for generations in the family is a curious and valuable relic of Colonial days now in possession of Mrs. Lizzie B. Link, a niece of the late Judge Stites and a clerk in the general delivery department of the postoffice. On a small sheet of brown paper, 3 by 2 inches in size, are the characters, which pronounce it a legal tender for one-third of a dollar. One side bears the inscription, "According to the resolution passed by congress Feb. 17, 1776," also a dyspeptic looking sun dial, beneath which is the terse admonition, "Mind your own business." On the reverse is a circle of thirteen links, each representing one of the states of the young Union, in the center of which is the motto, "We are one." It is an interesting and valuable relic of the good old days of the forefathers and their fractional currency, some of which would prove very convenient at the present day.-Louisville Commercial.

Where He Belonged. horse jockey trying to take in a simple broken winded horse for a sound one. The parson, taking the gentleman aside, told him to be cautious of the person he was dealing with. The gentleman declined the purchase, and the jockey, quite nettled, observed, "Parson, I had much rather hear you preach than to see you privately interfere in bargains between man and man in this way." 'Well," replied the parson, "if you had been where you ought to have been last Sunday you might have heard me preach." "Where was that?" inquired the jockey. "In the state prison," returned the clergyman.-San Francisco Argonaut.

A Blow to Enthusiasm. The desire to volunteer evidenced during the Chilian excitement recalled the story in a naval wardroom of a certain staff officer. He was in Europe when the big Cuba trouble of a dozen or fifteen years ago broke out. Thirsty for battle and glory, he cabled his services to the famous in our political history, because proper authorities. He learned nothing in that month, for the first and only from his action till the next pay day, when time, two presidents were elected within he found that the amount of the cable toll, these United States-Abraham Lincoln which in his enthusiasm he had neglected to pay, was deducted from his check. Davis in Richmond. -New York Times.

The Accidental Discharge of a Pun. A capital pun may arise by pure accident, as recorded in Bucke's "Book of Table Talk." A Mr. Alexander Gun was dismissed from a post in the customs at Edinburgh, for circulating some false rumor. The dismissal is said to have been thus noted in the customs books at the time, "A. LONDON THEATER TOUTS.

How Patrons Are Made Miserable by Cloak, Programme and Other Flends. You have scarcely put your nose inde a theater before you are seized upon and called to stand and deliver. First it is your coat. Men and women rush after you and pester you for your coat. They would rejoice if all were foolish enough to yield to their importunate demands, and risk colds, coughs, influenza and bronchitis for the rest of their natural life. Why, it is madness to venture into the stalls without a draft protector. Modern theaters are so constructed that they are mere draft traps.

If you are seated near the door you risk a stiff neck. You must wrap your cloak around you and be careful to protect your legs from the blasts of wind that pour in from every crack and canny. If you are in the center of the stalls, at many theaters directly the curtain is raised a tornado of wind rushes across the footlights and catches you by the throat. I often think that women are mad who venture into theaters with low dresses in winter time. It is bad enough

And yet these attendants get quite offended if we do not leave behind us the only garments that will protect us from adden death. Remember that no one s free from the theater highwaymen. Even those who go in with orders cannot get out of the cloakroom or programme tax. At last they must pay. I remember once going into a theater with a friend who had a keen sense of the ludicrons. I think it must have been W. S. Gilbert. It was a morning performance and he was attacked in the usual

"Coat. sir!" "What do you want with it?" "To take it off."

"Very well," he murmured innocently. The highwayman prepared to strip off his coat, and behold! my friend, who had prepared for the dodge, walked was a Christian, if my family attended away in his shirt sleeves! He had only put on his overcoat, with nothing underneath it.

Unconcerned he was preparing to enter the stalls coatless, when the attendant rushed after him. "Look here, sir, you must not go into the stalls like that!"

"Why not?" he asked with a bland and innocent air. "You asked for my next summer.' The more they want the | coat. You have got it. What more can you want?"

The coat and cloak fiends having been disposed of, you encounter the second rank of touts. Now it is a programme for which you must pay. They insolently bar your passage. They dun you and din into your ears, "Programme. sir!" It is not a civil request to know roundings, appointments and service that | if you would like a programme or not. but a demand with an implied threat. The implication is that you are a stingy person, who has no right to be seen in the stalls.

But this is not all. Having gone through the first easy stages of theatrical purgatory, you are worried all the evening with ice sellers and chocolate vendors and stale cake providers. If you are in the stalls, safely wrapped up from the drafts, these touts edge in between the very narrow and uncomfortable stalls and generally make hay. They tread on your toes, they disturb the little nest you have made, they make havoc with the ladies' back hair, pulling out confiding hairpins and crushing the result of the maid's handiwork. They don't care if they dig you in the eye with an ice tray or powder you with the refuse of sponge cake or bury you under chocolate boxes.

Their duty is to make as much money as possible for the speculating contracttor. It is not their fault, poor things. They all get a commission on their wares and it is their duty to tout .-Clement Scott in London Graphic.

Sense in National Proverbs. There is a deal of sound sense in the proverbs of a nation. Earl Russell deined a proverb as being the wit of one man and the wisdom of many, and the aptness of this is well shown in the following from the Spanish, "Since we cannot get what we like, let us like what we get." The thought is as old as the race of mankind, but ages passed before one man hit upon the happy expression of it. This saying, from the Chinese, is a whole homily on pride in one sentence, "When a tree is blown down, it shows that the branches are longer than the For a concise expression of the lofty aspirations of youth and the sober achievements of riper years, take this sentence from Henry D. Thoreau, "The youth gets together his materials to build a bridge to the moon, or perchance a palace or temple on the earth, and at length the middle aged man concludes to build a woodshed with them."-B. A. Heydrick in Brains.

The Planchette.

The planshette was the popular craze in the year 1887 in Japan. The instrument used there consists of three pieces of bamboo of a specified length tied in the middle to form a tripod, over which is inverted a shallow circular tray of lacquered ware about a foot in diameter. The legs are 1 foot 6 inches, Japanese, in length. All present put their hands gently on the tray, and the cokuri, as the object is called, or cokuri san, san being honorific, is politely asked to answer the proposed questions by raising one leg for "yes" and another for "no." Or for "yes" by turning around, many such devices being used. The operation A clergyman not long since observed a | will be seen to be more closely allied to "table turning" than what we know as gentleman by imposing upon him a the planchette.—Philadelphia Ledger.

It Went Off. One of my fellow students once bought an old gun, which he intended to use in some private theatricals he was producing. Several of his fellow comrades were in his room one night and the gan came up for criticism. One of them picked it up and pointed it, pulling the trigger. The others followed suit, but after six or seven of them had tried it. the next one pulled the trigger, the gun going off and blinding one of the poor fellows for life, as well as disfiguring him. -- London Tit-Bits.

It Turned Her Head. "Why did Lot's wife look back?" asked the pretty Sunday school teacher. "I suppose a woman passed her with new bonnet on," replied Johnnie Camso. - New York Epoch.

the following: Us fellers had the mostest fun when Washington cove named Hall west through the park. That was about three years ago, when the "Beehive" ge ser just broke loose, and everybody was hot fer seein the "Beehive." Wall, us drivers had heerd tell as how this Hall was pow'rful smart at sermonizin, so we all piles up ter the chapel. I ain't much of a judge, but I think it was about as ordinary a piece o' preachin as I ever heerd. Never heerd a shout from the amen benches, an not a soul got religion, an I don't think much of a parson as can't stir up more excitement than that. So my pal, Geyser Bob, he was there, and said he, "I bet I know a feller as can empty that whole room quicker than a coyute can kick." "All right," sez I, and I knowed there was goin ter be some fun, but I was a bit afraid that Bob was a goin to shoot; but he didn't. He just yells in the door, "The Beehive is spoutin!" an inside of ten seconds there wasn't but six people in the house besides the preacher, an he sezquick as a wink, fer I think he wanted ter git out himself, "Brethern, I think we better adjourn the meeting ter see the Beehive."-Philadelphia Record.

When Wigs Were Popular. Writers transmit to us some curious facts in regard to the demand and supply of false hair when wigs were in fashion. The trade in wigs, for France supplied all the rest of Europe, became immense, and was represented in Paris by a large number of wholesale merchants, who employed cutters to operate in the provinces, especially in Normandy, Flanders and Holland, where the hair of the women was finer. The hair of warm countries was not wanted, because too coarse. English women and girls did not care to part with their hair, and were not so poor as to be forced to the sacrifice. Some villages in Normandy furnished as much as ten pounds, aver aging two feet in length.

The price was from four to five francs a pound, and it was cut from the heads of the living, from the heads of the dead or sewed after combing, each kind having its commercial name. The great demand at last rendered the supply so scarce that horsehair had to be used instead or in part.—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

Horseflesh as Food. Horseflesh is used for human food in Denmark, Sweden and Switzerland, and also in several parts of Italy. It is not considered fit for human food in Bucharest, Scotland or England. Attempts were made in 1868, 1875 and 1878 to introduce it into London, but they were not suc-cessful.--Philadelphia Ledger.
