MY BOOKS.
My books beloved, you take me backward
Over the chain deep of years,
When "neath the glow of youth's sweet sunrise
Life one long day of joy appears.
With you again I feel fresh hearted,
As when the dawn of life first sent
To dance upon the page I pondered,
And to the thought their music lent.
In the old garden still I'm lingering,
With fragrant blossoms all around,
Or the home place sitting on the lawn,
Hear distant cow bell's tinkling sound.
While reading from some favorite author
The charming tale or poem sweet,
All sights and sounds harmoniously blending,
All keeping time with rhythmic feet.
—Philo A. Holder in Woman's Journal.
Mr. Holland at the Clover Club.
Few visitors to the Clover club dinners, when called upon to speak, have the nerve to stand up against the fusillade of wit and sarcasm without losing their composure. But at a dinner the cleverest met their match in George Holland, the actor. Mr. Holland was called upon by the chair to say something. No sooner had he risen to his feet than the fun began. All sorts of funny remarks were hurled at him, but without having the slightest effect. "The members were amazed at his complete indifference, but they determined not to be balked, and redoubled their efforts to break in upon the speaker. Again they were unsuccessful. The speaker continued the even tenor of his way until through with his remarks, when he took his seat with not even a hair's breadth of emotion showing upon his countenance.
