THE RAT'S OWN FAULT

IF HE HAD KEPT HIS HEAD HE WOULDN'T HAVE BEEN KILLED.

The Pretty Girl Would Not Have Beer Frightened, George's Trousers Would Would Have Missed Lots of Fun.

The boy sat on the big box, kicking his heels against the sides. He was a short, stumpy boy, with an abundance of the first postoffice saw its beginning. freckles held over from summer. The box was an ordinary packing box. It bringing letters from domestic and forstood on the sidewalk in front of the Walton building in Franklin street, near where the Sixth avenue elevated road crosses. Underneath the box a long, lean, gray bewhiskered rat had taken up temporary quarters.

The rat was in bad luck. In the first place a sneaky looking dog, droopy as to tail, a mongrel of the kind termed "yaller," was lounging about, nosing in the gutter and yearning for an opportunity to display the deviltry common to his kind. Behind the rat's refuge in a doorway a pretty young woman was talking to a much infatuated "George." An elderly and important looking personage, wearing gold mounted eyeglasses and arrying a gold headed cane, had just made an imposing descent from the elevated station and was promenading leisurely toward the box. A cart horse attached to a truck stood in front of a saloon near by waiting for the driver to come out. All was calm and peaceful. Then the rat came on the scene.

The first to see him was the boy. He jumped off the box, and the rat started out toward the station with the boy in hot chase. This aroused the dog, who. with a howl of anticipated sport, joined in the pursuit. The fugitive made straight for the elderly personage. The boy was a fairly good second and the dog a close third. The personage, becoming aware that something was coming his way, glanced over the top of the gold mounted eyeglasses. "Hi, there!" yelled the boy. "He's comin your way. Head 'im off. Swather 'im one with th' stick." The old gentleman "swathered." missed the rat and hit the boy on the shins. The boy gave a shrill whoop, lay down on the walk and wept. "Did it hurt you?" inquired the owner of the cane. That made the boy so angry that he stopped crying. eous wrath. "Did it hurt me? You ol" gold headed snooper. How'd you like it ef I clubbed yer bloomin ol' shins with a waggin spoke? What'd you say ef a fat headed cove— Hi! Here he comes back! Grab 'im! Turn 'im back! Hit 'im

when he goes by!" The rat had doubled on his track and was flying up the street again with the dog several paces behind. In between the feet of the personage dodged the rat. The dog essayed to follow by the same route and got tangled up with the feet. Down came the personage, his gold headed cane flying in one direction and his gold rimmed spectacles in another. Then and there he offered a few remarks that wrung from the boy an admiring tribute. "Gosh," said he, "you can cuss." In the meantime the rat was on his way up the street, and the pretty young woman who with her "George" had emerged from the doorway, was walking down the street engaged in conversation. "Yes, he was just as nice about it as he could be; said it wasn't any trouble at all. He said- Oh! O-w-w-w! George! E-e-e-e-e-e! It's a rat! Help! It's coming this way. E-e-e-e-e! Help me up on this box. Yes, I'm all right now, but- Oh, George, do you suppose he can climb up here? E-e-e-e! Don't let him climb up here or I shall d-d-d-

George let out a terrific kick that landed in the stomach of the pursuing dog. By way of retaliation the dog took off part of one leg from George's trousers, and fled across the street howling dismally until it came to the cart horse. Apparently connecting that animal with his misfortunes, the dog nibbled at its hind leg. The horse snorted and ran down the street with the truck clattering after. The rat, instead of taking this chance of escape, rushed frantically across the street and back again. with the boy, who had come up, followed by the personage, hot on the trail. The personage was regarding with undisguised admiration the pretty girl, who. with garments gathered and held up lightly in one hand, was standing on tiptoe on the box viewing the chase. George was looking at his trousers. The owner of the truck came out of the saloon in time to see his property rattling down the street. As he started after it, leaving a trail of profanity behind him. a gaunt cat sauntered out of the saloon. Before the teamster had caught his horse the cat had pounced on the rat and put an end to him. Then the dog avenged his woes by catching her by the back of the neck and shaking the life out of her. The boy hit the dog with a brick on general principles. Then he returned to the personage, the box. George, and the pretty young woman.

The latter was saying: "Oh, dear! I was so scared. I hope I- Oh, George, did I hold my dress up so very high? Please say I didn't! That horrid old man with the eyeglasses!" "Why, of course you didn't," said George promptly. The girl descended and walked away with him, her fears alleviated.-New York Sun.

Experiments with Pigeons. Experiments have recently been made to determine the length of time through which a carrier pigeon will preserve the "homing" instinct—that is to say, how long a bird must be kept away from its original or home loft before it will lose the instinct to return. Recently seventytwo pigeons in the German military servin captivity a month. Then they wer liberated. They started instantly in the direction of Mayence and arrived there in 44 hours. - Youth's Companion. Miles' Nerve & Liver Pills.

NEW YORK'S POSTAL SERVICE.

Interesting Facts About the Growth of the Delivery System. The fair of the postoffice employees was an incentive to resuscitate and revivify every postal article obtainable that was quaint, ancient, and antique, even to an exhibit of a picture of the building used Still Be Available, and the Small Boy for the first postoffice. In connection with this might have been mentioned the fact that it was in 1623, nine years after the construction of the first fort at the southern end of Manhattan Island, that Previous to this, masters of vessels eign ports brought them on shore and left them at a coffee house, where the merchants, the burghers and the loungers met to discuss the topics of the day. Here the letters were deposited in rack, where they might be obtained by the persons to whom they were ad dressed. In 1660, when New Amsterdam con sisted of straggling groups of one story houses with peaked roofs and gable ends fronting the street, and when the city extended no farther north than Wall street, there was the town winding near the Battery, and the government house stood in Water street, near Whitehall. It was in this year that the letter carrier first appeared-the lounger who carried the mail to the merchant or burgher. I was not until 1692, however, that the first city postoffice was established, near Bowling green, the postmaster being Richard Nichel.

In 1710 the British postmaster general established the general postoffice in this city and ordered that all mails coming by vessels should be sent there. A year later post routes between New York and Boston and New York and Albany were established, and the mails were carried on horseback twice a month. In 1740 a similar route was established between New York and Philadelphia.

In 1753 Benjamin Franklin was appointed postmaster general of the colonies. Alexander Colden soon afterward succeeded Richard Nichel as postmaster of the city, which office he held until the beginning of the Revolution. when the postofiice was abolished by the British officials and remained closed for seven years. William Bedlow, after whom Bedlow's island was named, was the first post master appointed after the war, and in 1786 he was succeeded by Sebastian Barnum, at which time the postal revenue was $2,789, and the city directory contained 926 names only.—New York Tribune.

Bound to Say Something. Among other anecdotes of university life Dean Hole tells of an occasion when there was some doubt as to the locality of a city mentioned in a Greek text, and the lecturer addressed a youth who had just come up from the famous Shrewsbury school,"Now, Mr. Bentley, you are a pupil of our great geographer, Dr. Butler, the Atlas of our age, who carries the world not on his shoulders, but in his head, and you can probably enlighten us as to the position of this ancient town. "I believe, sir," was the prompt reply. "that modern travelers are of the opin ion that the city ought to be placed about ten miles to the southeast of the spot it now occupies on our map."

After receiving respectful thanks for his information, the informer told Dean Hole as they left the lecture room that he had never heard of the venerable city before, but that for the honor of Shrews bury and the reputation of Dr. Butler he felt himself bound to say something.

Mr. Bement's Cabinet of Minerals. The largest and richest private cabinet of minerals in America is said to be that of Mr. Clarence L. Bement, of Philadelphia. His collection fills nearly a whole floor of his large house, which is lighted with special reference to seeing his treasures to advantage, and none of the pub lic museums have specimens of a size. beauty and perfection to surpass those that he has been patiently gathering for the past twenty years or more. The leading dealers in this country have standing orders to send him the best of what comes to them, and they willingly do so, for he is prompt and liberal in his payments, being a gentleman not only of of enthusiasm, but of ample fortune. What he does not take is sent to the British museum as the second best buy er. While it is difficult to set a price on a scientific collection, it is said by those who should know that Mr. Bement's cabinet is worth at least $125,000.—New York Sun. Philosophy from a Child. Two of the Virginians who have come to the Pasteur institute to be vaccinated against hydrophobia were in grave consultation. "I am sorry you told the dector that he must not hurt you," said the elder, aged twelve. "I am sure you would rather suffer than die." "No," replied the other, aged six, "1 would rather die and be born again and not be bitten by a dog." Savants have tortured their brains for centuries and not found truer philosophy, and the innocent say things that make the experienced turn pale.-New York Times.

A Grateful Old Woman. A dean was visiting his parishioners when one of them, an old woman, informed him that since they met "she'd gone through a sight o' trouble. Her sister was dead, and there wor a worse job than that; the pig died all of a sudden, but it pleased the Lord to tak' him, and they mun bow, they mun bow.'
