Fleeing From a Big Hotel.
Manager Boldt of the Hotel Waldorf is about the busiest and most bothered man in the United States. He presides over Everybody in the country apparently wants to be conducted on a visit of inspection through his hotel, and he hasn't employees enough to attend to the visitors.
Mr. Boldt has had good reason to know that to some folks nothing is sacred. Visitors have taken all sorts of odds and ends, and he excused their conduct on the ground that they were anxious to possess souvenirs. Some of them have even gone so far as to deface the carvings of screens and other furniture which cost a small fortune.

Mr. Boldt said yesterday he had taken precautions to guard against this in the future. The monster reached his climax a few days ago when a couple of richly dressed women lunched at the hotel and then asked to be shown through the rooms. In their rooms they took silver from the tables in the private dining rooms and anything else they could lay their hands upon. He went so far as to appropriate the napkins in the dining room, and he even went so far as to hunt and promptly relieved of their booty. Manager Boldt, however, refused to prosecute them. While they were very humbly dressed, he thinks they were professional thieves.—New York Herald.

He Gave It Up.
She was a bright mathematical scholar and pretty, and when she rattled at the stamp window and laid down a dollar bill the handsome clerk in a blue necktie on the line was all attention.
"There's a dollar," she said. "Give me four times as many twos as ones and the rest in threes."
"I beg your pardon," he stammered.
She repeated her request.
"Certainly," he said and began to lay out the stamps.
He worked at it 10 minutes without success, she waiting patiently the meanwhile. He wasn't busy with any one else, and she didn't seem to mind waiting him a minute, so she gave him another five cents.
Then a customer came in.
"Just keep the dollar," she said sweetly, "and I'll come around in the morning and get stamps in the proper proportions."
It thought she was becoming sarcastic and turned to wait on the next comer, but when he looked again for the girl of the mathematical stamp window, she was gone.
That evening he visited the newspaper office for counsel and advice, and the next day when she called he swore there wasn't a cent stamp in the office.—Detroit Free Press.

Aphides the Most Wonderful Insects.
Almost every plant has its peculiar aphid, or plant louse, creatures which nature has endowed with wonderful powers of reproduction. These little insects, which may be from 20 to 50 generations in each year, each generation capable of producing others! A distinguished naturalist has given figures to prove that one pair of aphides, in five generations, all of which could be brought into the world in less than 10 days, would have descendants to the number of 3,900,000,000.
Aphides, which, although they cannot also be classed as the "most wonderful insect of creation," are certainly the wisest. They use a certain species of aphid as their cover! The ant finds the aphid with his process pushed entirely through the bark of some tender plant, slowly sucking its lifeblood from it. (It cannot be properly called by any other name) teaches the ant that if the aphid is irritated he will void this digested sap. Straightway the ant marches up to the helpless aphid and proceeds to irritate the poor creature with his feet, and forthwith the sap begins to flow from two bristly tubes which are situated near the aphid's mouth. This flow of sap is what the ant had reason to expect, and as he is very fond of it he begins to greedily suck it up.—St. Louis Republic.

A Question About National Savings.
It was stated in the house the other night that the stationery department had effected a notable saving of a few hundred pounds by buying its pencils in Bavaria. In other words, in order to show a saving of this paltry amount to the richest country in the world, these noble statesmen have robbed some hundreds of men, women and children of their livelihood and sent some thousands of pounds out of the country. It is as if a farmer who has to keep his lands should let them remain idle while he pays foreigners to do his work. Cannot the department be made to understand that a saving effected of any kind must be, at least, a saving to the people?
