Character of Charles I.

The worst mischance that could possibly have befallen Charles I was the accident of his royal birth. As a private individual he might have been esteemed as an upright, honest, gentleman, merciful and perhaps, but gifted with literary and artistic tastes, an affectionate parent and devoted husband. On the throne such good qualities as he possessed were neutralized and vitiated by his defective education, the unprincipled character of those with whom he chiefly associated and, above all, by his absolute selfishness.
The low cunning that characterized his father was in Charles developed into an almost incredible disregard for truth and loyalty. Not the slightest cabal could be attached to his plight. He was not less faithless to his friends than he was vindictive to those who opposed him in the exercise of his royal prerogative. He had more exaggerated notion of kingly prerogative than even his predecessor. Nothing that he did or attempted to do could in his eyes be so wrong as that he should not be his opinions and shift from one policy to another, but he would certainly not have acknowledged any alteration in himself. Circumstances might alter his mind, but he himself remained ever the same, so at least he would have asserted, and probably was also his belief.—Gentleman's MagazineBeating a Snake.
"In one of the great circumstances of Constantinople I saw an old Turk following a merchant trade that to me seemed the most peculiar of any in all the world," began Orcutt Lore. "This business was that of resting pipes for temporary usage by the guests of the hotel. His stall was a little red curtained bazaar, in which he sat with a snake before him. On this table were ranged the largest variety of pipes that was ever my opportunity to behold. He had pipes of all tonalities and many that led to nationalities."
"The German merchant was not waiting, nor was the American customer absent. Dried pipes from England were there, and Irish shillies in great numbers, besides, he had the long, rubber stemmed, cold smoking Turkish pipes and the little slim stemmed opium pipes of Chinese persuasion. Behind him, ranged in several scores of little wooden pockets, were tobacco of every conceivable variety. He rented his pipes full to the brim with the renter's own choice tobacco for the very small sum of a centure, which is less than a penny of our own money. However, the renter was compelled to give a small sum of money security for the pipe."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.The Coldest Spot on Earth.
M. W. Hill, director of the Physical observatory at St. Petersburg, says the coldest spot on earth inhabited by man is the village of Verkhnoyarsk in Siberia. Observations show that the temperature during the year in this place is 13 degrees above zero. The lowest temperature registered was 23 degrees below zero, which would be far below the temperature of the year in our own country.
Steamship Travel Safe.
In 1892 there were 620,000 passengers by steamships of whom 210 people were lost, or one in every 2,908.333. The fatalities on railways were much higher. Out of 300,000,000 passengers carried on railroads, also were killed. Seagoing is safer than railway or any form of vehicular travel and also than pedestrian locomotion in great cities.—Exchanges.Disinherited by Naturalization.
Over in Plymouth county they have a singular case. A naturalized Englishman willed his property to his father and committed suicide. His estate includes about $5,000 worth of land. This will is being contested on behalf of the state on the ground that the father was a citizen of the United States. If young Wainwright hadn't naturalized, his father would have inherited the property, the estate probably not.—Iowa Register.She Had Never Met Them.

Over a hundred new telegraph offices were opened in India during the first three months of this year.Paderewski's Escape.
Mr. Paderewski is to be congratulated upon his successful escape from these hostile shores. The piano is not only an instrument of which the distinguished Polish gentleman is master. He is easily the first of coeval humans in his ability to strid into harmonious expression the emotions of that powerful and complicated creation, the American female. It would seem that if his natural endowments rendered him peculiarly fit for any great service not connected with music it would be to give a lock of his hair to every feminine admirer whose enthusiasm seemed to deserve it.
But, prodigal as nature has been to him, it is clear that if he were the seven Sutherland sisters all in one and distributed his riches on a basis of two hairs to a lock the late demand for trophies would have reduced him to a bare pole. Mr. Paderewski is particularly manly and reasonable man of genius and shows no overt partiality for the role of Bunthorne. He would be more or less than human if it were not a relief to him to get six days of salt water navigation between him and his American devotees.—Harper's Weekly.Danger In City Streets.
With the advent of spring the physical endurance of these New Yorkers who have survived the hardships of an unusually severe winter is put to another trying test. Scarcely has one of the heaped up street rubbish which for months was allowed to endanger the public health been gradually washed away by the kindly elements, when the playful furies following a sunny Easter morn upon us with the blue cloud of germ laden dust. Our streets are now swept, and doubly so, first by the superannated brigade of dilapidated broom holders and next by vigorous street sweepers. It would be irresistibly amusing, if it were not so sadly humiliating from a sanitary point of view, to watch the tender solicitude with which the city authorities and the municipality slowly gather together little heaps of dry dirt, and the reckless way in which these accumulations are immediately dispersed by gusts of strong wind.
