DR. TALMAGE FINDS MANY LESSONS IN THE PREVAILING PANIC.

There Is Nothing Wrong In Desiring to Be Rich, but Like All Human Desires It Should De Rigidly Subjected to God's

BROOKLYN, July 16.-Rev. Dr. Talmage has relected as his subject for today a topic of the greatest interest and timeliness-viz, "Comfort For Business Men," the text be-ing Isaiah xl, 2, "Speak ye comfortably to

What an awful six weeks in commercial circlest. The crashing of banks from San Francisco to New York and from ocean to occan. The complete uncertainty that has halted all styles of business for three months and the pressure of the money market for the last year have put all bargain makers at their wit's end. Some of the best men in the land have faltered; men whose hearts are enlisted in every good work and whose hands have blessed every great charity. The church of God can afford to extend to them her sympathies and plead before heaven with all availing prayer. The schools such men have established, the churches they have built, the asylums and beneficent institutions they have fostered, will be their culogy long after their banking institutions are forgotten. Such men can never fail. They have their treasures in banks that never break and will be millionaires forever. The stringency of the money market, I am glad to say, begins to relax. May the wisdom of Almighty God come down upon our national legislature at their convening next month in Washington and such results be reached as shall restore confidence and revive trade and multiply prosperities! Not not only now in the time of financial lisaster, but all through life, our netive business people have a struggle, and I think it will be appropriate and useful for me to talk about their trials and try to offersome curative prescriptions.

THE TEMPTED MERCHANT.

In the first place, I have to remark that a great many of our business men feel ruinous trials and temptations coming to them from small and limited capital in business. It is everywhere understood that it takes now three or four times as much to do business well as once it did. Once a few hundred dollars were turned into goodsthe merchant would be his own store sweeper, his own salesman, his own bookkeeper. He would manage all the affairs himself, and everything would be net profit. Wonderful changes have come. Costly apparatus, extensive advertising, exorbitant store rents, heavy taxation, expensive agencies, are only parts of the demand made upon our commercial men. And when they have found themselves in such circumstances with small capital they have sometimes been tempted to run against the rocks of moral and financial

This temptation of limited capital has ruined men in two ways. Sometimes they have shrunk down under the temptation. They have yielded the battle before the first shot was fired. At the first hard gun they surrendered. Their knees knocked together at the fall of the nuctioneer's hammer. They blanched at the financial peril. They did not understand that there is such a thing as heroism in merchandise, and that there are Waterloos of the counter, and that a man can fight no braver battle with the sword than he can with the variation.

If it come honestly and go usefully. For the lack of it sickness dies without medical and interior and inter with the sword than he can with the yard-

Their souls melted in them because sugars were up when they wanted to buy and down when they wanted to sell and unsalable goods were on the shelf and bad debts in their ledger. The gloom of their countenances overshadowed even their dry goods and groceries. Despondency, coming from limited capital, blasted them. Others have felt it in a different way. They have said: "Here I have been trudging along. I have been trying to be honest all these years. I find it is of no use. Now it is make or break."

The small craft that could have stood the stream is put out bey d the lighthouse on the great sea of speculation. Stocks are the dice with which he gambles. He bought for a few dollars vast tracts of western land. Some man at the east living on a fat homestead meets this gambler of fortune and is persuaded to trade off his estate here for lots in a western city with large avenues and costly palaces and lake steamers smoking at the wharves and rail trains coming down with lightning speed from every direction. There it is all on paper! The city has never been built nor the railroads constructed, but everything points that way, and the thing will be done as sure as you live. And that is the process by which many have been tempted through limitation of capital into labyrinths from which they could not be extricated. I would not want to chain honest enterprise. I would not want to block up any of the avenues for honest accumulation that open up for young men. On the contrary, I would like to cheer them on and rejoice when they reach the goal, but when there are such multitudes of men going to ruin for this life and the life that is to come through wrong notions of what are lawful spheres of enterprise it is the duty of the ministers of religion and the friends of all young men to utter a plain, emphat-ic, unmistakable protest. These are the influences that drown men in destruction

THE PEVERISH THEIST FOR CAIN. Again, a great many of our business men are tempted to over anxiety and care. You know that nearly all commercial businesses rre overdone in this day. Smitten with the love of quick gain, our cities are crowded with men resolved to be rich at all hazards. They do not care how money comes. Our best merchants are thrown into competition with men of more means and less contelence, and if an opportunity of accumula-tion be neglected one hour some one else picks it up. From January to December the struggle goes on. Night gives no quiet to limbs tossing in restlessness nor to a brain that will not stop thinking. The dreams are harrowed by imaginary loss and thushed with imaginary gains. Even the Sabbath cannot dam back the tide of anxiety, for this wave of worldliness dashes clear over the churches and leaves its foam on Bibles and prayer books. Men who are living on salaries or by the culture of the soil cannot understand the wear and tear of body and mind to which our merchanis are subjected when they do not know but that their livelihood and their business honor are dependent upon the uncertainties of the next hour. This excitement of the brain, this corroding care of the heart, this strain of effort that exhausts the spirit, sends a great many of our best mea in midlife into the grave. They find that Wall street does not end at the East river. It ends at Greenwood! Their life dashed out against money safes. They go with their store on their backs. They trudge like camels, sweating from Aleppo to Damascus. They make their life a crucifixion. Standing behind desks and counters, banished from the fresh air.

Oh, I wish I could today rab out some of these lines of care; that I could lift some of the burdens from the heart; that I could give relaxation to some of these worn muscles. It is time for you to begin to take it a little easier. Do your best and then trust God for the rest. Do not fret. God Suddenly the storm came, and the surges manages all the affairs of your life, and he trampled the decks and swung into the manages them for the best. The steamer went not give to the winds your fears and your fretfulness and your distresses. You brought nothing into the world, and it is very certain you can carry nothing out. Having thump of the buckets, as men unused to food and raiment, be therewith content. The merchant came home from the store, There had been great disaster there. He opened the front cor and said, in the midst of his family circle: "I am ruined. Every-thing is gone. I am all ruined." His wife the sen. A few passengers escaped, but great many things left. God forgive me? Again I remark that many of our business men are tempted to neglect their home duties. How often it is that the store and the home seem to clash, but there ought not to be any collision. It is often the case family, a sort of agent to see that they have dry goods and groceries. The work of family government he does not touch. Once or twice in a year he calls the children up on a Sabbath afternoon when he has a half hour he does not exactly know what to do with, and in that half hour he disciplines the children and chides them and corrects their faults and gives them a great deal of good

The family table, which ought to be the place for pleasant discussion and cheerfuless, often becomes the place of perilous expedition. If there be any blessing asked at all, it is cut off at both ends, and with the hand on the carving knife. He counts on his fingers, making estimates in the interstices of the repast. The work done, the hat goes to the head, and he starts down the street, and before the family have risen from the table he has bound up another bundle of goods and says to the customer, ried man. The following letter was written "Anything more I can do for you today,

DUTY TO ONE'S FAMILY. A man has more responsibilities than those which are discharged by putting competent instructors over his children and giving them a drawing master and music teacher. The physical culture of the child will not be attended to unless the father looks to it. He must sometimes lose his dignity. He must unlimber his joints. He must sometimes lead them out to their sports and games. The parent who cannot larget the severe duties of life sometimes to fly the kite and trundle the hoop and hase the ball and jump the rope with the children-ought never to have been tempted out of a crusty and unredeemable soli-

If you want to keep your children away from places of sin, you can only do it by making your home attractive. You may preach sermons and advocate reforms and denounce wickedness, and yet your children will be captivated by the glittering saloon of sin unless you can make your home a brighter place than any other place on earth to them. Oh, gather all charms into your house! If you can afford it, bring books and pictures and cheerful entertainments to the household. But, above all, teach those children, not by half an hour twice a year on the Sabbath day, but day after day, and every day teach them that religion is a great gladness that throws chains of gold about the neck; that it takes no spring from the foot, no blitheness from the heart, no sparkle from the eye, no ring from the laughter, but that "her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are

I sympathize with the work being done in many of our cities by which beautiful rooms are set apart by our Young Men's Christian association, and I pray God to prosper them in all things. I come almost to think-that the heaven that would be appropriate for him would be an everlasting poerhouse! While, my friends, we do admit there is such a thing as a lawful use of money-a profitable use of money-let us recognize also the fact that money cannot satisfy a man's soul; that it cannot glitter in the dark valley; that it cannot pay our fare across the Jordan of death; that it cannot -New York Times. across the Jordan of death; that it cannot unlock the gate of heaven. But I must have a word with those who during the present commercial calamities have lost heavily or perhaps lost all their estate. If a man lose his property at 30 or 40 years of age, it is only a sharp discipline generally, by which later he comes to larger success. It is all folly for a man to sit down in midlife discouraged. The marshais of Napoleon came to their commander and said, "We have lost the battle, and we are being cut to pieces." Napoleon took his watch from his pocket and said: "It is only 2 o'clock in the afternoon. You have lest that battle, but we have time enough to win another. Charge upon the

Though the meridian of life has passed with you, and you have been routed in many a conflict, give not up in discouragement. There are victories yet for you te gain. But sometimes monetary disaster comes to a man when there is something in his age or something in his health or something in his surroundings which make him know well that he will never get up again. In 1857 it was estimated that for many years previous to that time annually there had been 30,000 failures in the United States. Many of those persons never recovered from the misfortune. But let me give a word of comfort in passing. The sheriff may sell you out of many things, but there are some things of which he cannot sell you out. He cannot sell out your health. He cannot sell out your family. He cannot sell out your Bible. He cannot sell out your God. He cannot sell out your heaven! You have more than you have lost. Sons and daughters of God, children of an eternal and all loving Father, moury not when your property goes. The world is yours, and life is yours, and death is yours, and immortality is yours, and thrones of imperial grandeur are yours, and rivers of gladness are yours, and shining mansions are yours, and God is yours. The eternal God has sworn it, and every time you doubt it you charge the king of heaven and earth with perjury. Instead of complaining how hard you have it, go weighed down by carking cares, they are home, take up your Bible full of promises, get down on your knees before God and thank him for what you have, instead of spending so much time in complaining about what you have not, THE ARK OF SAFETY.

God launched this world 6,000 years ago. It has been going that the father is the mere treasurer of the on under freight of mountains and immor tals, but one day it will stagger at the cry of fire. The timbers of rock will burn, the mountains flame like masts and the clouds likesails in the judgment hurricane. Then God shall take the passengers off the deck, and from the berths those who have long been asleep in Jesus, and he will set them far beyond the reach of storm and peril. But how many shall go down, that will advice and then wonders all the rest of the never be known until it shall be announced advice and then wonders all the rest of the year that his children do not do better when they have the wonderful advantage of that semiannual castigation.

The first boy called upon decided that it meant "an old man what hain't married," but another changed this to "any man that ain't married." To many who are not grandmothers this may sound like exaggeration, but it is the truth nevertheless, for with our own eyes we have seen it and with our own lips we mean to praise it, for it is a well known fact that women are averse to washing their faces as liberally as they wash their hands, and this new

The French massage operators have discovered the force of soap on the skin, and the lather mug and brush is on the table of every Parisian lady who aspires to good looks and a good complexion. Superiority of the American Girl. While possessing charm and ability the American girl cannot be said to be greater in beauty than the English girl. In fact, the American women are not noted for physical charm. Their complexions have not the couleur de rose of other nations. The piquancy and abandon of the French woman far surpass these qualities of this favorite of ours. And in personal ornamentation she is her rival most decidedly, and with accomplishments more varied. Where is that charm of voice that is so "excellent a thing in woman?" We possess it not. The soft cadences, the mellowness of tones, are not ours. What attribute so clever does this creature possess that wins all hearts? What charm does she wield that entrances all beholders? Perhaps it is the liberty that is accorded her, the freedom from restraint, the independence of thought, that gives her this manner so bewitching, a graciousness so persuasive, a personality so captivating. Here is a young girl who maintains berself with credit and respect under all adverse circumstances; who defends her person with the shield of dignity; who preserves the armor of virtue by her pure and gentle nature; whose life lies in her own hand by purpose of will, by strength of character, by decision of judgment. All these mustities are hers. And something more which makes her of our land the ruler! We cannot define it. But we know that across the ocean, in eastern lands, on every shore where this charm of her presence is felt, this indefinable gift of her character is honored and appreciated, the question is, Who is she? Why, the American girll-Haeper's

WOMAN'S INTELLECTUAL GROWTH. The Benefit of the World's Fair Congress

Broadly Estimated. The woman of the present must be a woman of affairs. It is no longer sufficient that her children shall be well taught and well bred; that her house shall be well ordered and her social obligations discharged in full. The world still exacts fidelity to all the domestic relations, and it demands buch more. There is an unvoiced sentiment to the effect that now, since the universities and colleges have opened their doors to give young girls thorough intel-lectual training, they must apply that training not alone within the home, but without in the state. The new conditions have produced a new type, and it is a type that writes, talks and makes speeches with no detriment to its dignity or its womanli-

Instead of reproaching this so called emancipated woman, fathers, husbands and brothers commend her position, indorse her opinions and stand by her with all the old time chivalry which we were assured would be withheld when women were no longer intellectually and financially dependent. One of the most delightful features of the congresses that have been held thus far in the series proposed during the summer and autumn has been the approval of men who have attended the sessions to applaud as auditors, talk it all over afterward and marvel at the progress of the world. Many have urged their wives to "let things go at nome a little" and attend the meetings, the like of which will not be enjoyed soon again. There have not been, as might have been expected, complaints of neglected socks and underdone dinners, of household affairs going awry and children suffering from lack of maternal oversight.

The husbands and fathers have been content with a little laxity in the domestic government for the sake of the mental broadening which they knew would result. As auditors, they have listened patiently to dull papers and have enthusiastically applauded the bright ones, congratulating the speakers afterward. They have generally admitted the excellence of that which was good and condoned the faults of that which was mediocre or poor. There have been instances where the husbands urged the reluctant wives to take some more active part in the proceedings, feeling a proud certainty that their better halves were equal to the occasion, whatever it might be. As for the women, it has been an immeasurable advantage to them. They have learned self control, composure and deference to others and have realized that the success of one is the success of all. The social features of the congresses have also had their advantages. Some of the beautiful houses of Chicago have been thrown open with generous hospitality, and the country delegates have had an opportunity to study their art treasures, to meet polished and gracious women of the world upon common ground. It has been an occasion of mutual benefit—those whose opportunities have been more liberal learning to respect that worth which comes to the social function in a plain gown and a plainer bonnet, brains and good breeding winning recognition that mere money cannot command among cultivated people. It is hardly possible to estimate the farreaching result of these great conferences. The women of the cities learn, as they could not possibly learn in any other way, that a metropolis does not necessarily absorb all knowledge, refinement and intellectual

Last of all, the congresses will furnish at mmense amount of material for conversation and thought. They will suggest new lines of study, and the impetus they will give to universal culture cannot be reckoned In the latter particular the congresses will not be excelled even by the great material exhibit in Jackson park.-Chicago Inter

The Wizard's Next Feat. "I think I shall soon turn my attention to one of the greatest problems that I have ever thought of solving, and that is the direct control of the energy that is stored up in coal, so that it may be employed without waste and at a very small margin of cost," said Mr. Edison. "Ninety per cent of the energy that exists in coal is now lost in converting it into power. Now, that is an awful waste, and even a child can see that if this wastage can be saved it will re sult in vastly cheapening the cost of every thing which is manufactured by electric or steam power. In fact, it will vastly cheapen the cost of all the necessaries and luxuries of life, and I suppose the results will be of mightier influence upon civilization than the development of the steam engine and electricity have been. It will, in fact, do away with steam engines and boilers and make the use of steam power as much of a tradition as the stagecoach now is." Mr. Edison looks further ahead than this campaign, for he said: "I think it quite likely that I may try to develop a plan for marine signaling. I should use the well known principle that water is a more perfeet medium for carrying vibrations than air and should develop instruments which may be carried upon seagoing vessels by which they can transmit or receive through an international code of signals reports within a radius of, say, 10 miles."—Me
