A MOUTH CURVED UP AT CORNERS.
The world is not so bad a place
As the growing cynic paints it,
And life in the main is fair and sweet
To those whose minds are not so tight
So don't belong to the pessimist crew
And don't be one of the scorers, Don't go about with a clouded brow
And a mouth drawn down at the corners.
Though fortune seemeth to frown on you,
Be never so discouraged.
If you put your mouth into rainbow shape,
"Twixt yield you look a gleam of light Pray let the bow be inverted, Though you be lighted by fortune's pelt,
"Thou art the best man of the score."
Still keep a heart that is brave and strong
And a mouth curved up at the corners.

The Way They Do It.
A little man with a sad face, a thin suit of clothes, a skullcap and a weak voice stood at the east end of the Madison street bridge holding out a bundle of sheetings toward the passersby. A policeman came along—one of the large, two breasted kind.
"Got a license?" he asked.
"The man with the sheetings unob-tained the badge, which was attached to his vest. In the meantime he looked up at the policeman. His expression was one of mingled awe, fear and apprehension.
"Give me a pair," said the policeman, pulling out two strings from the bundle.
"Yes, sir," said the peddler.
"Better make it two," said the man who represented the dignity and majesty of the law.
"All right, sir," said the sheeting man, his voice weaker than ever, and he got the rim. If they were ever before the pleasure of hearing."
The old man pointed on the table until the pepper caddy lay down for a rest and then remarked in a voice of joy coldness, "Hortensia, will you have some taters?"
"Yes, and I will."

Stopped the Weddings.
Saxon girls 1,000 years ago always wore a gold crown during the marriage ceremony, this article being kept in the church and a fee being paid the priest for its use by the brides of the parish.
In the year 927 the Danes raided the south of England and stole 100 church crowns, and there was no marrying in the afflicted villages for nearly six months until new crowns could be made.
