THE END OF A VILE SUIT.

The Pollard-Breckenridge infamy was brought to a conclusion Saturday afternoon by the jury rendering a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, allowing her $15,000 instead of $50,000, the amount sued for. The verdict has given general satisfaction throughout the country, as, to have allowed her the full amount would have been equivalent to a complete exculpation, a feature of the suit impossible to admit under the circumstances. There is no condoning Breckinridge's life as far as it relates to his association with Miss Pollard. He has deliberately thrown away grand opportunities and now that he has been shorn of the mask which has shielded his true character from public scrutiny we see him as he is, a man symmetrically proportioned in possessing the gifts of nature, but devoid of sufficient moral stamina which he should have known was necessary to preserve him from baser instincts, and he nows stands before the world as a branded hypocrite and a libertine. Great is the fall! Some of us were accustomed to look upon him as the Christian statesman. Now we see him as the central figure of a disgusting drama, the detested hero of transactions which dare not be mentioned within the sacred precincts of family where honor and virtue alone should reign. As to Miss Poliard complete exculpation would have been a crime. An artful wanton, a blackmailer, in the end she persistently determines to drag her co-partner in impurity down to the dust. She has by any thing so loathsome as the literature which emanated from the court room where the transactions of this

COXEY'S ARMY. There has been a good deal of ridicule and flippant talk indulged in by the daily press in connection with the march of Coxey's army toward Washington That the movement is the very essence of crankism no one doubts, yet to the people of Maryland there is a serious aspect in the case. Already the country is running full of tramps who daily importune at our doors for something to eat and it has become a positive griev ance to those homes conspicuously situated along the highways, and if Coxey penniless men in Washington after they have accomplished their mission what then? What provision has been made for their return or where is the commistheir food? The truth is they will be compelled to start out any and everywhere and the counties lying contiguous or near to Washington will be over-run by a lot of aimless wanderers who have no definite object in life save to get a living with as little exertion as possible.
