The Mad Waters Foam Through the Patapsee Valley with Great Impetuosity-The Bridges, the Railroad Tracks and Other Property Yield to the Irresistible Force of the Current-Four Days without Through Trains-County News in Gen-

The rain of 1889, which caused the Johnstown flood was a terrific downpour causing destruction to life and property over a wide range of country. yet the flood of Sunday night last as far as the Patapsco river is concerned, was even greater than that of 1889, the water rising fully 18 inches higher, and the destruction to property greater especially to the tracks of the B. and O. railroad. In the evening heavy banks of cloud and much lightning in the west and north-west told of the tremendous downpour that was going on at the headwaters of the river and later the storm burst upon this section with great fury and copiousness. The people here along the river seemed oblivious to the extent of the flood until near Monday morning when a number who either lived or had property close to the water's edge were aroused to a sense of impending danger. Mr. Chas. Cramblet was aroused to find his stables across the deep and the extensive lumber yard of Messrs. Werner Bros. near by was in imminent danger. Mr. George W. Radcliffe was likewise called up by Chief Police Vansant and Deputy John Lilly, who somehow had become cognizant of the extent of the flood, to find his coal yard which lies parallel with the river nooded far beyond what it ever had been except in the flood of 1868. By strenuous exertions he saved a good deal of property while some was lost. The cellar of the store, containing a considerable amount of merchandise, principally dry paints, was more than half full of water causing a loss of about $300. Had the river here been cramped as much as it was in 1868 the destruction to life and property might have been fully The space between the piers of the bridge is much more extended than in the way of the flood at that time were never rebuilt, and as a consequence the water has a freer passage. In 1889 the water came within 18 inches of the bridge. On Monday at about 3 o'clock, the water reached its maximum height time it is believed the water was almost touching the bridge, and presented a scene quite appalling when one is disposed to contemplate the power of such a rushing flood, heightened no doubt here by the impetus it re-ice west of Baltimore farther than Woodstock until Thursday evening. At the Black farm, between Wood stock and Marriottsville, the high railroad embankment damming the old bed of the river was washed away, the water tearing out the west track entirely and leaving the other swinging for a length of nearly 100 yards. At this point the channel was years ago diverted so as to straighten the railroad, but the water took its natural course in spite of the enbankment intended to withstand its assaults. There was a worse break at Gorsuch Station and others at Gaither's and Morgan's. The track was also undermined between Oella mill dam and Hollofields, the damage all told amounting to several thousand dollars to the railroad company in the matter of repairs alone, besides the delay of travel. As soon as the waters recoded Monday morning all the available railroad force gathered along the tracks, the work of restruction being in charge of Superintendent Thomas Fitzgerald, Division Engineer R. The Howard county approach to the Hollofields bridge and the Baltimore county end of the Woodstock bridge were washed away. Other bridges at Henryton. Gorsuch, Gaither's and Hood's Mill, connecting Howard and Carroll counties, were carried away, cutting off all communication between the two counties from Morgan's to Alberton. The shores of the river for miles were strewn with bridge timber and other debris.

The carding department of the Alberton Cotton Mills was flooded. The footbridge recently built was completely wrecked. The cellar at the village store was filled with water and serious loss was catail. Several houses had their first floors submerged, and the people took refuge in the Catholic church and houses situated on higher ground. The boiler-house of the paper mill at Morgan's was inundated.

ALBERTON ITEMS.

ALBERTON, May 9.-The Patapsco River was very high here Sunday night five years ago-the time of the Johnstown flood. The fencing at the houses on the Baltimore county side of the village was partly carried away. The Carding room was partly covered by water, but a general flooding was prevented by the employees in this room, who placed boards at the doors and excluded the water to a great extent. The mill race was damaged considerably. the Baltimore and Washington electric The cellar of the company's store was badly flooded, and when the water went down the mud was left deposited on the brick floor to the depth of several inches. A hose was connected with a fire plug in the mill yard and water conducted to the cellar. When it was nearly cleansed the hose burst and some of the clerks received a good ducking. The roads were rendered impassable, but they have been repaired by the company. The new foot bridge leading to Guilford avenue, recently constructed, was completely demolished. Many persons had to leave their houses and take refuge in the Catholic Church and on higher ground. The railroad tracks near here were badly damaged. Great sympathy is expressed for the Gary Mfg. Co., by the people here. They were the only losers. The company took special pains last summer to beautify the village and make it attractive. So well was it done that indeed Alberton was justly styled "the prettiest village on the B. & O. between Baltimore and Harper's Ferry."

Most of the work is now lost and great sympathy is felt for the company. The loss can not now be ascertained, but we presume it is a large amount. The mill started Wednesday morning, and if we can judge the future by the past, the company will soon have the village in perfect bloom again. Sanitary precautious will be taken to avoid the miasmatic and febrile influences which will be exerted by the mud left by the State Superintendent Wm. A. Baker of the M. S. S. Union preached at the
