SENT TO THE HOUSE OF CORRECTION Two Incarcerated for Vagrancy-Another

Gets a Free Ride Home. Richard, alias "Tug" Wilson, the supposed leader of a band of desperadoes along the line of the Baltimore and Ohio week, were tried before Justice B. II. of vagrancy. Wilson was sent to the vited. House of Correction for twelve months.

ten months in the same institution. Another trial before Justice Wallenhorst Monday proved to be quite interesting, the more so on account of the flavor of adventure it contained. When the case of a bright young fellow, who gave his name as Clare A. Ferris, who had been confined to the county jail since August 1, on the charge of illegal car car riding and vagrancy, and John riding, was called, nothing less than the usual trip to the "Cut" was expected by the onlookers. Ferris' explanation, however, soon reversed this opinion, and resulted not only in his discharge, but also in a pass on the train to his home He ran away from home, he said, which was at Ellwood Station, on the Pitts burg and Western Division of the Balti more and Ohio Railroad, on the 23d of last April, in company with a son of prominent minister of that place. They together went to Europe as drivers of cattle on a cattle ship, and after return ing had wandered around in different states. When taken off the cars by the officers he was trying to beat his way back home, as he was without means to purchase a ticket.

Water Works Too Costly. The Mayor and City Council at their regular meeting Thursday evening received the report of Mr. D. G. Adlesburger, the engineer who has had charge of the water works survey and the estimated cost of the improvements being placed at $28,000, inclusive of water rights, the council considered that such plan was not feasible, and thereupon abandoned the idea of water works for the present. The enormous expense of procuring a gravity supply was caused by the fact that the survey as given called for two large cuts, one at Rock Gate hill 1100 feet long, and 16 feet deep, the other at Blue Hill, 100 feet long and 26 feet deep. The length of the pike line as contemplated would be five miles. The last legislature empowered the corporation to issue $30,000 in bonds for the purpose of constructing a system of water works. The small margin between the estimated cost and the amount as limited in the act, together with the anticipated cost of water rights, impelled the council to lay the matter

JESSUP'S. JESSUP'S August S .- The farmers and gardeners here are anxiously looking for good soaking rain as we have had but light fall since early part of June last. Our springs in most parts are failing, and water for stock is becoming a scarce article indeed, as some of our farmers have to water their cows from their neighbors' springs. The two large canners here, Mr. Summers and W. L. Gardner, & Sons, are each busy repairing preparatory to the canning season. The latter firm have ilso added a large store room to their place of business, and will also put in a large Fairbank scales for the convenience of farmers who may want to weigh hay or grain, or for themselves to weigh tomatoes, as they intend to purchase them by weight the coming season. There has been considerable improvement in this neighborhood recently. The Sisters of Charity have had a force of carpenters at work repairing the domtories in the grove, put in four dormer-windows in one of their cottages, built and addition to their manager's house, an gave the whole house a very pretty coat of paint, built a brooder and incubator house where chickens by artificial heat have been hatched and raised in large numbers. They have also recently built or enclosed six large yards containg 11 acres with wire netting for poultry, each run having a house, and at the same time have built a piggary of nine apartments with plenty of shelter and gangway to transfer a hog or pig from any one pen to my other. Although Mr. James had been attentive to Miss Montague for several years there was no announcement of their engagement, and their wedding was somewhat of a sensation. Miss Montague, now Mrs. James, is the second daughter of Mr. Charles P. Montague, of Howard county, and a sister of Mrs. Alexander Brown, the wife of the well-known Baltimore banker. She is also a sister of Mr. William I. Montague. Mr. James comes of a well-known New York family and is related to Mrs. Royal Phelps Carroll. who was formerly Miss Marion Langdon of New York.

The marriage was a very quiet one and took place at Mondawmin, the country seat of Mr. Alexander Brown, near Druid Hill Park. The ceremony was performed by the Rey. Wilbur F. Watkins, assistant minister of Emmanuel P. E. Church. The bride was given away by her brother-in-law, Mr. Alexander Brown, who came on from Narragansett especially for that purpose. Only few intimate friends were present, the bride and groom leaving almost immediately after for a long wedding tour. Mr. James, who was a widower prior to his second marriage, lost his first wife position of a Text. Wesley Grove Camp Sunday had the largest crowd in its history of twenty- one seasons. There were fully nine early morning until nearly midnight. Persons who have visited the camp in ed by Rev. W. A. McDonald, of Harford county; preaching at 11 A. M, by Rev. A. Coke Smith, of Norfolk, Va; preaching at 3 P. M., by Rev. J. P. Stump, of Voodstock, Va, children's meeting at P. M., led by Mr. J. H. Drechler; young cople's meeting at 7 P. M., in charge of Rey E. V. Regester, and preaching at 8 P. M., by Bishop A. W. Wilson, of Baltimore. At ten o'clock the signal for retiring was sounded.

The auditors were profoundly im pressed with the sermon in the morning by Rev. Dr. A. Coke Smith. Every one was intent on his words from the an nouncement of his text-"He Shall Se the Travail of his Soul, and Shall Be Satisfied"—until the "Amen" of the earnest prayer that concluded it. Many were moved to tears in the course of the sermon, and it was the main topic of conversation throughout the day. Dr. Smith is one of the most vigorous preachers in the Southern Methodist Church. He is a South Carolinian by birth, and was educated at Wofford

College, in his native State. After having filled several prominent pulpits in South Carolina he accepted the chair of theology in Vanderbilt University, Nashville, and subsequently was transferred to Granby Street Church, Norfolk, Va., his present charge. A new church is being erected for his work at a cost of After the morning service the crowd dispersed for dinner and soon a great julet reigned over the grove, broken ony by the clack of knives and forks. The otel dining toom was filled with a hungry throng, and in the woods thousands! tables, consisting of table cloths laid on the ground. Then they demolished the good things spread thereon with genuine camp meeting appetites. Wesley camp Sunday was like one big, happy family, and the old-time spirit of informality and simplicity, the central principle o camp-life in years gone by, was still preserved, though all of the comforts and advantages of modern camp-life were alongside of it. Everybody tenting in the grove knows everybody else, and the tents are like so many rooms in a big. hospitable mansion, with the green sward outside as the general drawing-room.

THE BATTLE OF FIRST MANASSAS. 33d Anniversary of the First Great Con flict of the War-Bravery and Dash of the Maryland Line-Gallantiy and Skill of the Confederate Leaders: Smith, Elzey,

Stewart and Johnson.-Graphic Sketch by One Who Participated. From the Maryland Journal (Towson.) On Sunday, July 21, 1861, the battle of First Maryland Regiment Infantry did topographical and engineer work of effective and singularly conspicuous service. President Davis saluted the regiment and shook hands with Colonel Arnold Elzey, addressing him as General Elzey, which meant that he was promoted on the battlefield, and General him the Blucher of the day. Jackson's brigade of Virginians, nearly cut to pieces, was saved from complete disaster by the First Maryland, and Jackson that day won his sobriquet "Stonewall," lent meals in public dining room, 25 so called by brave General Bee, who very soon thereafterfell with a mortal wound. Coming on the field early in the afternoon, when it was thought the Confederate army was beaten, the First Maryland met, fought and checked a Federal brigade, which was about to turn Jackson's flank, and being reinforced by the Third Tennessee, and aligned on it, that moment the Maryland and Tennessee regiments (less than 1000 men in the aggregate) charged the enemy up a hill and drove him from the field. Two guns of the Newtown battery had, for awhile, supported the left flank of the Maryland Line. This began the rout of the Federal army. The Marylanders joined in the pursuit, halting at Rickett's captured Federal battery, then across the Stone Bridge on the turnpike leading to Alexandria but after dark they were recalled to the battlefield, where the tired and hungry soldiers slept that night and rested next day, or as well as they could during a heavy rainfall; cooking rations from captured stores, and with sanguine expectations of marching into Maryland. The Fourth Brigade of Johnson's

Army of the Shenandoah, composed of these four regiments: the Tenth Virginia, of visitors gathered around imprompting Col. John Gibbon; Thirteenth Virginia, tables, consisting of table cloths laid on Col. A. P. ivin, (afterwards Lieutenant General;) First Maryland, Col. Arnold Elzey, and Third Tennessee, Col. J. C. Vaughan: left Winchester on the after noon of July 18, being the rear guard of Johnson's army, making a forced march to reinforce Beauregard's army at Manassas, confronted by a heavy Federal force. The Brigade marched most of the entire way from Winchester to Manassas, crossing the Blue Ridge via Ashby's Gap. The weather was very hot. The First Maryland made the last five miles to the battlefield at the 'double quick,' under a blazing sun and over a road deep with dust, which filled every one's eyes, nostrils and lungs but th

enemy saw the cloud of dust and fancied the reinforcing column was larger than its actual strength, and so it was with the other two regiments that followed. There was much suffering from fatigue hunger and thirst. But the Maryland regiment pushed on steadily, the Old Line bugle sounded the advance and not program, consisting of declamations and a soldier lagged. Led and encouraged by Brig. Gen. E. Kirby Smith-brave and skillful full of energy and dash-the Marylanders soon put a wide distance ing piece was by Miss Vertie Owings, of | between them and the Third Tennessec Simpsonville; music, by Mrs. Frick, of and Tenth Virginia; the Thirteenth York, Pa.; declamation, Miss Annie De Virginia being sent towards Manassas Junction, General Smith's command was: "March to the firing! The watchword is Sumter?" They met many Bennett, of Baltimore, and a vocal duet wounded from the battle and some skulkers, who said the army was cut ur and defeated. At this General Smith would yell: "Pay no attention to those poltroons. Forward!' As they neared the heaviest firing, a murderous musketry fire was opened on them in front, by the enemy, from the woods. The regiment, at double quick, was instantly thrown from column into line, by a right wheel, and charged to the woods, from the open. General Smith was shot from his horse by this fire. Colonel Elzey succeeded Smith and kept in the saddle during the fight. Elzey said to Major Bradley Johnson: "This means for me six feet of ground or a yellow sash, (Brigadier General). Lieut. Col. George II. Steuart led the Maryland regiment into the thick of the fight. A famishing soldier at a perilous point would drop out of ranks to pick a tempting blackberry, when Colonel Steuart would rush at him with upraised sabre and threaten to cut him down if he did not instantly return to his place in ranks, and the man obeyed with alacrity. Smith, Elzey and Steuart were fine types of West Pointers, fresh from the United States regulars, and they found in the men under them

On the 23d the First Maryland and Stuart's First Virginia Cavalry, all under the peerless Colonel J. E. B. Stuart, were sent forward ten miles, to Fairfax Court House, where the infantry biyouacked. Many of the men were footsore, but all were shortly recuperated, in time to advance on the enemy and drive him from his exposed positions.

Elzey was disgruntled at Smith's promotion to a grade above him, which led to an odd incident, as Elzey's regiment first went into action at Manasses. Major Johnson was afoot, sick and well nigh exhausted, and so informed Colonel Elzey. Elzey saw Smith fall, as though dead, and saw his horse start off. Turning quickly to Johnson, he said: "God is just; Smith has fallen; go, get his horse!" The Major seized the opportunity and the horse, But, brave old Elzey had his own turn He fell at Cold Harbor, a year later, with a Minie bullet through his face and neck, just such a wound as Smith had received Both recovered and were rewarded with
