"RED JACKET" OF NEBRASKA. She Was the Last of the Frontier Dance

House Favorites. The dance-house, which used to keep up with the trail of civilization as the latter pushed its way to the sundown, will soon be a thing of the recollection. The traveler from Chadron, Neb., who sat in the Grand Pacific yesterday, wait ng for an Eastern train, had been talking on the changes in the West, and incidentally spoke of the dance-house.

"The last one in our town disappeared

ome year ago," he said, "and the last noted character in connection with the institution died and was buried the other day before I left home. She was known in that section as Red Jacket. She was the terror of the country. Her nickname grew out of her wearing an old Repairing Broken Plates, $1.00 to $2.00 red jacket, which she always put on when she started out on the rampage. From underneath the fringe of the jacket there usually hung from four to six navy revolvers, and she rode a bronco as a man would ride. Her body was put in a pine box, and that was placed on a dray, and one man with a shovel accompanied it as grave-digger and pall-bearer. She heart-in fact I was so wretched and unlooked as haggard in death as she had nerved that on several occasions my was not more than fifty years old. She ooked seventy-five. "She had run the gamut. She had fallen from the summit to the depths. She went to Minnesota from New York state. She was born in the latter state, and when she left it as the bride of a banker in Minnesota she was a handsome, intelligent and contented woman. Her husband died three years after the marriage, and she lived with her daughter for some time after, until she met another man, whom she married. He was an adventurer. He galloped through her fortune and left her penniless. Then she met a real estate man in Sioux City who pretended to pity her. The woman was in need of that, and before she realized it, perhaps, she had compromised herself, and then he left her with the shame upon her. Just then they were constructing the Elkhorn Railroad, and a hard crowd followed up the tracks. This woman went along. One night she killed a man in a dance-house, and this hardened her more than ever. She was not arrested. Soon after she killed another man at Valentine. She was not arrested for hat, although the cowboys tried to teach her a lesson by stripping off her gar-ments, putting a rope around her body and dragging her through the streets. "A man who claimed to be her husband settle in Wente River Valley, near Dacota Junction, near what is now Chadron. She advanced him money to prove up his land, and then she came on and made her entracte in the town by riding through the main street, shooting ight and left, until every store in town closed up. Then she rode away to the ranch where the man who claimed to be her husband had settled.

· One day she was out looking over her possessions, when she saw a character known as Arkansas John herding horses. The range happened to be on her land. She galioped towards him, and, as she was gaining on him rapidly, he dismounted and disappeared in the thicket Income nearly fifty years, and upon their excellence have attained an UNSURPASSED PREEMINANCE which establishes them as UNEQUALED in

She drew her gun on him and made him climb a tree. He finally got his horses, but it cost him considerable money and more trouble.

"She defied every one whom she met. Once sheencountered a man who held his pistol levelled at her until she cried "Fire away! the red jacket is bulletproof,' and with that he dropped his pistol and ran. The last man she killed was an unknown; that was for booty. She robbed his wagon. She was arrested for that, and confessed the crime. The trial was continued frequently, and finally she got a jail sentence. Her last husband, or the man she claimed as such. disappeared long before. Their old shack was burned. She became demented, and was sent to the Norfolk Insane Asylum. She recovered. Her last year was passed as an old, broken-down mendicant. She lived by begging, and eked out a desolate and miserly living, if such it could be called. At times she was almost starved, and she had grown as haggard and hideous as a witch in 'Macbeth.' But she had two redeeming traits. She was good to the sick and kind to animals. She was the yery last of that crowd which cursed the West.-

Chicago Tribune.

In some parts of New Mexico there grows a grass which produces a somniferous effect on the anima s that graze upon it. Horses, after eating this grass, in nearly all cases sleep standing, while cows and sheep almost invariably lie down. It has occasionally happened that travelers have stopped to allow horses to feed in places where the grass grew pretty thickly, and the animals have had time to eat a considerable quantity before its effects manifested themselves. In such cases horses have gone to sleep on the road, and it is hard to arouse them. The effect of the grass passes off in an hour or two, and no bad results have ever been noticed on account of it. Cattle on the ranches frequently come upon patches of this grass, where they feed for perhaps half an hour, and then fall asleep for an hour or more, when they wake up and start feeding The programme is repeated perhaps a dozen times, until thirst obliges them to go to water. Whether, like the poppy, the grass contains opium, or whether its sleep producing property is due to some other substance, has not been determined.—Pearson's Weekly.

Mr. Frederick V. Colvill, Botanist

United States Department Agriculture, says: "The so-called sleepy grass mentioned in a recent article in Pearson's Weekly is known technically as Stipa viridula robusta and is known from reliable persons to have a narcotic effect on horses and other stock."

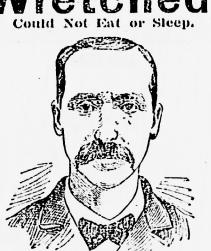

A Dog Story. A good story is told of a farmer's dog which had been found guilty of obtaining goods by false pretences. He is extremely fond of sausages, and has been taught by his owner to go after them for himself, carrying a written order in his mouth. Day after day he appeared at the butcher, s shop, bringing his master's order, and by-and-by the butcher became careless about reading the paper. Finally, when settlement day came, the farmer complained that he was charged with more sausages than he had ordered. The butcher was surprised, and the next time Lion came in with a bit of paper between his teeth he took the trouble to look at it. The paper was blank, and further investigations showed that whenever the dog feit a craving for sausages he looked around PARLOR AND CHURCH ORGANS, for a piece of paper and trotted off to the butcher's. The farmer is something out of pocket, but squares the account by boasting of his dog's intelligence
