DR. CALEB DORSEY, DENTIST, (formerly of Howard county) GRADUATE OF BALTIMORE COLLEGE OF DENTAL SURGERY. OFFICE, 1218 W. Lexington St., Baltimore, Md. HIS FIRST PARACHUTE DROP.

A Point of View Different from That o the Terrestrial Observer.

The great balloon which was to bear me on my first journey up into the azure helghts, and from which I was to make my maiden leap with a parachute, was tugging at its moorings upon the broad lawn. I confess that it was with some nervousness I took my seat in the little car behind Joseph Norcross, a skilled aeronaut, who had from dizzy heights made many a flight earthward through the air. With this same balloon he had during the past year safely made sixtyseven ascensions, and had each time successfully descended with the parachute So why should I fear?

Norcross smilingly welcomed me, and as he gave the order to cast loose the line, and the men on the ground released the great aerial traveler, I felt myself afloat in a little boat upon an ether sea. There was no sudden jolt or jar about it, so cleverly was the release effected. Putting my head over the side of the car, I looked below and was surprised, for, apparently, we were not ascending, but the great world, with all her glory of green and gold, was dropping from us away down into space. I looked in pleased amazement upon the wonderful panorama presented as the earth kept receding Norcross smiled.

Then I gazed upward at the great birdlike balloon soaring triumphantly on. Again I looked down, and the houses and barns seemed to crouch closer to the ground, and the villages to cluster together. Streams and lakes at last looked like mere threads or blots of silver. Away in the north the range of mount ains looked like an emerald wall, while that dark blur on the earth below was the thriving and populous country seat. We were far from the world. Suddenly we were in a cold, drizzly rain, and the earth was shut from view. Linquiringy looked at Norcross.

"We have entered the clouds," was his smiling explanation, "and we are not yet In five minutes we emerged into beautiful sunshine. Beneath lay a heavy bank of fog burnished by the ardent afternoon sunlight, but the earth for ime was not within sight. Suddenly through a rift in the clouds I caught a glimpse of it far, far below. So distant was it that only here and there could an object on its surface be discerned. Truly we were getting well up in the world The thought at once attracted my serious attention to the balloon. Suppose it should spring a leak or collapse, what would be the fate of the daring sky travelers? Or, on the other hand, if the va've line failed to operate, would we go on upward forever! The thought disturbed me not a little. The aeronaut smiled genially, and said:

"I have made a thousand ascensions unharmed. From what height would you like to leap?" "Make it about 1,000 feet," I replied, determinedly.
"All right," Norcross responded, as he scanned the aerometer and promptly pulled open the valve preparatory to de-Placing my hand out over the side of the car, the rush of cold air against my down-turned palm indicated that we were again swiftly journeying earthward. Soon we were enveloped in the fog of the cloud-bank for a minute or two, and then emerged with the distant earth in view. The glance at it from my perch there away up near the clouds only increased nervousness. "Look up! Look up!" exclaimed the aeronaut, "or you will lose your nerve."

A glance downward when descending with the parachute might, I knew, turn my hair white or bring on a stroke of paralysis, as it had done in the case of some other men. "Twenty-five hundred feet from here to the ground," exclaimed the smiling He then bound round my body under the arms a stout rope, the other end of which was secured to the trapeze bar in ed to the parachute that hung at the bottom of the car.

It was now rapidly approaching the time when I should make the leap of my life, and, gra-ping the guy ropes of the car, I stood upon the seat in readiness, while Norcross gave me hie final instruc-

"Leap as far out into the air as possible and the tightening of the trapeze line will release the parachute, which will open its fifteen-foot spread in a second or two," he said; "then, all you've got to do is to look up and hang on." "Twelve hundred feet," shouted Norcross. I tightened my grasp on the trapeze bar, looked steadfastly upward and awaited the word to leap. It was the most trying time of my life, but I was determined to make the jump.

"Go!" suddenly exclaimed the aeronaut. Closing my eyes I made a great leap out into space, and could feel my self rapidly shooting downward. Then the trapeze line tautened with a slight jerk that indicated the release of the closed parachute, and I looked up just in time to catch a fleeing glimpse of Norcross's smiling face peering over the side of the car far above me. But the parachute did not open. The seconds passed into a minute, and then into ed to death on the ground 1,000 feet

Suddenly there came a sharp click from above, and my speed perceptibly slackened. Ah, the parachute had opened! My life was saved! With an intense feeling of satisfaction I felt myself deliberately descending, and, looking about, though not directly beneath me, took in the scenic beauties of my journey on every hand. But there came over me a grave fear. Suppose in my descent I should strike the top of a church steeple or one of the many chimneys with which that section of the country abounded! Common sense, however, came to my rescue. Norcross, I felt convinced, knew his business and had the balloon directly over a clear space when I made the leap, so where was the sense of such fooish fears and baseless apprehensions? Finally I mustered my courage and looked difectly below. The earth was approaching rapidly. The fences, trees, houses and barns became more and more clearly outlined, and roofs seemed to rise directly out of the ground. Horses, cattle and men rose rapidly from pigmy proportions to their normal size. I saw that I would land in a broad pasture field about half a mile from where we had ascended, and there was not a chimney, roof or tree within one hundred yards. There was nothing to

I saw a crowd of men and boys hastening toward the field to welcome me. Then a few seconds afterward, to my delight, my feet struck the ground, and the most thrilling journey of my life was

Calmly I folded the parachute and then looked up for the balloon, I saw it gracefully sinking to the earth in an adjoining field, and a few minutes later had the satisfaction of receiving the hearty congratulations of the aeronaut who told me, to my great surprise, that the parachute opened within three seconds after I leaped.—Philadelphia GREAT REBUILDING SALE

"What can I do for you, miss?" inquired the clerk in a Market street drug store of a blushing young woman. She glanced about her, relates the San Francisco Post, in embarrassment, and then replied:

"I want some castor oil." "All right; in just a moment.,'
The clerk moved around behind the counter for a moment and then went to the soda fountain. "Do you like soda?" he asked.

"Oh, yes, indeed."

"What flavoring do you perfer?" Pineapple, please."
The clerk drew a glass of the fizz and the young lady drank it. Then the clerk sat down on a stool and commenced to chat with her. She was apparent ly annoyed, but replied courteously to all of his remarks. Finally, she said: "If you'll give me the castor oil I'l
