The ancestors is a man who hadn't the courage to ask for of the present generation received from mythical beings certain super natural secrets, upon which the societies and the ceremonials are based. One of the societies is the War Society. A person undergoing initiation into it is suspended from the rafters of the ceremonial house by a rope passed through strips of the flesh of his back, which are cut for that purpose. Beneath him stand the mem bers of the Society of Fools, with sharp lances upraised. If he falls he is impaled by the lances, and etiquette demands that he shall be eaten at once by the cannibals. It is more than suspected that these Indians do now and then kill an individual and
