GREAT FALLS AND GEYSERS—YELLOW STONE NATIONAL PARK.

Of all the remarkably beautiful localities of this country, that tract of land known as Yellowstone Park stands pre eminent in the grandeur of its glacial and volcanic scenery; its lofty snow and ice capped mountains; its silvery lakes; and its turbulent rivers, cascades and falls. The park covers an area of about 200 square miles and comprises the greatest geyser region of the world, together with some of the most wildly beautiful scenery.

Foremost among the natural attractions of this place is the Grand Canon of the Yellowstone and its Falls. At places this grand gorge is 2,000 feet deep, while the bottom of the canon is hardly wide enough to permit the river to pass through, notwithstanding its wildly turbulent character. The falls are two in number, the upper and lower, and are about one-quarter of a mile apart, the first being 140 feet in height, and formed by a perpendicular cliff over which the water dashes in a smooth, silvery sheet. Below the falls the speed increases as the canon narrows, and the river breaks into a grand rearing stream of foam and spray, only calming the instant it takes its second leap over a precipice 390 feet in height and forming the second fall.

The first portion of the illustration is a view of the canon and its upper fall. If the Yellowstone, its canon and its falls, can be surpassed in point of beauty and interest, the geysers and other volcanic features of the park present perhaps still more striking objects, for here are found the most beautiful geysers of the world. Some hourly shoot vast streams of steam and water high into the air, and others make themselves known only at periods of months or years. The principal and most regular gevser of Yellowstone Park is Old Faithful, which may be seen in eruption hourly, while the larger geysers crupt at greater in passages in the earth communicating with subterranean caverns or reservoirs of hot water, the periodical discharges of steam and water being due to convulsions occasioned by the generation of steam in the passages or tubes. It is known that water will boil at different degrees of heat at different eleva-tions, and it is to this fact that is due the eruptions of the geysers. Assuming a geyser tube to be filled with water and and to be at an elevation where water will boil at the mouth of the tube at 100° Centigrade, under normal conditions the water at the mouth of the tube has not this heat, while the water some distance below has this or even a greater heat, but as we descend the boiling point becomes higher, and this greater heat of the water is always below its corresponding boiling point in the same manner as at the mouth of the tube. When, however, the increase of water and vapors at the base of the tube and in the subterra-nean caverns with which they communi-cate results in a sudden lifting of the water in the tube, the highly heated wa-ter at the lower parts thereof is lifted to an elevation at which it will boll, whereupon the water in the tube is started to subsides into inaction, only to be again awakened when the above conditions Clo-ely related, both in origin and Speedy and reliable HOMERS nature, to the geysers, are the hot springs. These are most plentiful in Yellowstone Park, slong Gardner River, where they bubble continuously and where their clear, limpid water soon cools and settles in terraced reservoirs along the sides of the mountains, presenting a most beautiful appearance in the blending of the many colors of the coral-like formations at the terraces. and in the exquisite clearness of the water. Principal among the terraces is EVERY PIANO FULLY WARRANTED the Minerva Terrace, which is composed for five YEARS. of a series of successively elevated re-SECOND-HAND PIANOS serviors, from one to the other of which the water flows in beautifully clear and smooth sheets. This terrace is shown in the illustration.

Uneconomical Lubrication, It is said that elaborate tests and investigations made a short time ago upon the largest railroads in the country showed that more than one third of all the lubricating material supplied in a given time was wasted and lost by carelessness in handling, leakage, etc. A great deal of this waste oil is drawn from the journal boxes by the centrifugal force of the rapidly moving wheels and deposited upon the track. The ties and wooden bridges are injured and destroyed by being thus constantly soaked with oil, and are also rendered highly indammable. These difficulties have led to the adoption of various kinds of solid or semi-solid grease in place of oil. A lubricant of this kind is now in use which seems to be all that could be wished, if the claims made for it are true. It is said that red hot iron will not ourn it, water will not wash it off, steam at 90 pounds pressure will not remove it. It is used with cotton waste in orlinary journal boxes, and is said to be so enacious that no amount of jarring will shake it from the fibers and allow it to leak out upon the wheels. Its lubricating power is claimed to be such that one ackage has sufficed for a run of 50,000 miles, representing more than a year of
