THANK THE LOYELLS!

To Thein More Than to Others Is Due tho Pair Play Accorded to Whee men. From the beginning of cycling in this country the makers have been its strongest bulwarks, and to them is due the credit for the proud position riders of the bleyele hold. To the members of the trade, therefore, we own the members of the trade, therefore, we own much, as it was their pluck and their money that have made for us our position.

bleveles. Their success has been unbounded, as they have made a rame for the Lovell all of us encountered the symbolic words "Lovell Diamonds?" To estimate the gross amount that has been expended for advertising would be a difficult task, but it is said that ing would be a difficult task, but it is said that considerably over $100,000 was spent by them during 1934. All the big Eastern dailies had entire pages, which cost lots of money, and the magazines filled many pages exploiting Lovelt Diamond Cycles.

Can it be wondered at, then, that cycling has become popular, when men like Colonel Lovell spend such sums to make it so? d Lovell is Treasurer of the John P. Lovell Arms Company, and is a man of rare business attainments, acquired by long ex-perience and an aptitude possessed by few. In private life he has won the respect and es-teem of every one he has been brought in contact with, while his public record is equally good, on five different occasions representing his town in the Legislature, serving in both branches. He served on the staff of Governor Long for three consecutive years and is now a member of Governor Greenhalges staff. He has been a delegate to four National conventions, an I there is not an office in the his disposal were it not for his great business responsibilities. There is no man in the bicycle business more respected than Colonel Benj. S. Lovell, and no better bicycle is made in the world than the Lovell Diamond.

Twain's Dilemma. Mark Twain once expressed a desire to attend the annual dinner of the Gridiron Club of correspondents in Washington: but when an invitation was sent him, his regrets were received by return mail. Meeting a member of the club later, he complained that he had been neglected. When informed that an invitation had been sent him and his regrets received, Mr. Clemens scratched his head, as though in perplexity for a moment, and then said: Isaac?" "He's my keeper. He's the man my wife hired to prevent me having any more fun." Mark then explained that Isaac opened all his letters and invitations, wrote answers, which in the case of invitations always consisted of regrets, and then burned them. When asked what is Isaac's other name, the humorist replied, sadly: "I don't know. My wife hired him, and she told me what his name is, but I have forgotten. I call him Isaac, as he is doomed to the fate that nearly befell the favorite son of Abraham. When I get well I intend to cut him up in chunks and burn him on the altar, and I don't care if the angels holler till they get diphtheria." "Doesn't he ever consult you about the answers to your invitations?" "Never. He always sends my regrets and says I'm sick, and that's going to get me into trouble. I told him so the other day. Said I: Isaac, when I die and go to heaven, St. Peter is likely to take up some morning and remind me about those polite falsehoods you're telling in my name, and then I'll have to look all over Tophet for you to prove an alibi."

Osside matter deposited in the body through long years of unthinking diet must be dissolved as far as practicable. Attention must be given to the drinking water; much of it contains lime in excessive proportion, or other mineral elements. Distilled water and acid fruits are efficacious and the least harmful. Their chemical action retards the stiffening of the joints, rheumatism and, in fact, old age. The daily use of distilled water is, after middle life, one of the most important means of preventing secretions and the derangement of health.

his decision. When he reached the house his wife told him that a notice of the interest due on the mortgage had come by the morning mail and that the grocer had been around with his bill, but she had only a $5 bill, which she had declined to use in parl payment of either claim. "Give me the money,' said Carter. If this does not win it's good-bye with me,' said he, softly to himself as he strode away. "He made his way down to Harrison avenue and entered the first gambling den he found running. Sizing up the size of a lay-out of a faro table. he threw the bill down upon a card. It won. He let it remain and the money won again. In an Lour he had $250 in his pocket. Taking that money, he returned to his home and the next day he hired a helper and resumed operations on the mine. After three days the porphyry was broken through and a good contact found, Soon after ore was discovered, and he made $3000 before the water became so troublesome that he had to abandon the property. Carter paid off the mortgage, and when he left the camp for other fields he was quite comfortably fixed." "I had a narrow escape once," said another old-timer. "About cleven years ago, with a partner, I was working at a claim over on the Mosquite range. The hole was about sixty feet deep, and we usually took turns working at the bottom. It was early in March, and where our shaft was located the danger from melting snows was considerable and made us a bit cautious. It was my day to work at the top, and Fitch, my partner, was down below. He had not been down more than an hour before he signalled to me to hoist him up. When he reached the surface he said he was not reached the surface he said he was not feeling well, but thought that he left. I waited until all was quiet, and then took to the ladder. When I reached the mouth of the shaft I found that the slide had swept everything slick and clean, and Fitch was nowhere to be seen. He had been swept away toward the gulch below. Hastening down, after considerable difficulty located him, mangled and half buried under the snow and rocks. He was unconscious, and several ribs were broken. Assisted by some miners who were not very far away, Fitch was carried down to camp and placed in a hospital in this city. He lingered along for two months, but he must have been internally injured, for, in spite of care and the doctor's skill, he died. Had he remained that day below I would have been the victim of the slide instead of Fitch." "That reminds me of an accident which happened to old John Thompson some years ago," began the next narrator. "Over on the hog-back which separates Bald Ergle Mountain from Lake gutch, west of Sugar Loaf. Thompson, with a partner, was working a claim. Their shaft had reached a depth of eighty feet, when one morning, just after an unusually heavy snow. Thompson followed by his shepherd dog, started for the shaft for the purpose of fixing the windlass. When he arrived there Thompson found that a huge drift had completely covered the shaft. Taking a shovel, he began to clear away a space about the hole. He had been working but a few minutes when he suddenly found himself sinking. He brought up with a shock at the bottom of the shaft a few moments later. When he recovered consciousness he found himself in his bunk in the cabin, while his partner stood over him rubbing bruised places with some strong liniment. It was some moments before Thompson could collect his faculties and regain his senses sufficiently to recall what had happened. He then learned that the huge mass of snow had weighed down the timbering about the mouth of the shaft, and that in falling he had taken with him the whole drift. The snow had eased his fall considerably. His dog with remarkable sagacity, scampered back to the cabin, barking and howling in such an unusual manner as to alarm Thompson's partner. Suspecting that comething was wrong at the shaft, he went there without delay, the dog scampering madly ahead. The situntion needed no explanation. Lowering the bucket, the miner slipped down the rope, made the body of Thompson fast, and then climbed up again. He soon had Thompson at the surface, and after a few days Thompson was able to resume work." -Chicago Record.

SOME ODDITIES OF MARRIAGE.

Vidows and Widowers Generally

Avoid Single Life and Mate Again.

It has been remarked that times of peculation are invariably accompanied by increase of marriages. Dr. Farr, the eminent statistician, hazards therefore, the suggestion that it is the spirit of speculation itself that leads many to embark on matrimony at such times. Another reason, which he is careful not to ignore, is the increased presperity that induces and sometimes seeps to accompany what he calls the periodical epidemics of speculation. A great war, after it is over, is good for marriage. lishment of new industries or the extension of old ones. The reason is the same in all these instances; the increased prosperity of the general body of the people. So intimately is matrimony associated with national welldoing that it has come to be styled the parometer of prosperity. Its indications, however, are more for the future than for the present, dealing rather with the expected and anticipated than with the actual. But this only goes to substantiate what was said of marriage as speculation. The nation is sometimes extraordinarily sanguine, and when this is the case marriages are pleatiful. Great popular leaders inspire this feeling. A statesman of genius at the head of affairs perceptibly ncreases the marriage rate. In a word the great fluctuations in the marriages are the result of peace after war, abun dance after dearth, high wages after want of employment, speculation after languid enterprise, confidence after dis trust, and national triumphs after national disasters. The marriage returns invariably show a corresponding increase for any augumentation in the duties paid upon malt, wine and spirts. They in the same way keep pace with the consumption of tea, sugar, coffee and tobacco, and wool and timber. The one increase is both are but effects of the same cause -increased national prosperity. Marriages after banns are five times as numerous as marriages after licenses. When the price of wheat is high the diminution in the former class is comparatively much greater than in the latter. They are the first to be affected by high prices, licenses and banns being regarded as the prospective badges of capital and labor-not without importew spring is preferred. Half the weddings throughout the country are celebrated on Wednesday and Thursday. Saturday has more than the average number. Friday is not a favorite, as few marriages are celebrated on that day. Widowers are more inclined to marry than bachelors. Widows are Both facts are eloquently in favor of the comparative advantages of matrimony. For one bachelor that marries between the ages of 50 and 55 seven These are marriages out of an equal number of each class; the actual numest only in proportion as they exceed by seven to one the actual number of widowers living at these ages. Under the same conditions, for every spinster married between 20 and 65 two widows

Eggs Among reptiles the eggs exhibit great variety. The eggs of the allegator are dongated and almost cylinderical, evenly rounded at both ends, and about the size of an ordinary duck's egg. The eggs of the sea turtle are as large as a small apple, rounded, and have a flexible shell. Those of the snapping turtle are much smaller, but also rounded. Those of the terrapins and other genera are oblong, as also are those of lizards. In common black and vellow-dotted American fresh-water errapins, and in the painted terrapin. the eggs require four years of growth befere they are laid. Take a sevenyear-old turtle of this kind. It will contain only very small eggs, all of uniform size. An eight-year-old tortoise of the same kind will have two sets of eggs, one larger and one smaller. One of nine years will have three sets of eggs, the oldest set being the size of a small pea. A tortoise of ten will have four sets of eggs, and in that year she will lay for the first time, and give birth to the most mature sets.

A Standing Cavalry Order. An old cavalryman says that a horse will never step on a man intentionally. It is a standing order in the English cavalry that, should a man become dismounted, he must lie down and keep perfectly still. If he does so the entire troop will pass over him without his troop will pass over him without his being injured. A horse notices where he is going, and is on the lookout for a firm foundation to put his feet on. It is an instinct with him, therefore, to step over a prostrate man. The injuries raused to human beings by a runaway horse are nearly always inflicted by horse are nearly always inflicted by the animal knocking them down, and not by his stepping on them.—Boston Herald.

Soldiering in the Orchestra The last echo of one of Sousa's overtures was just dying away over the sandhills south of the Fair grounds when Gen. Schofield stepped in front of the band and saluted the distinguished leader. Sousa returned the salute and sent one of his men to escort the General up into the band stand. "That music was beautiful-beautiful!" exclaimed the General, as he shook Sousa's hand warmly. "I am astonished, sir, that you get such results with so little discipline." There is nothing that Sousa prides himself more on than being one of the strictest of disciplinarians, and he was naturally nettled at the General's criticism. "Why, General, my men are under perfect control. I'm sure they are thoroughly drilled, and I can hardly believe that there is any lack of discipline. I haven't noticed it." "No. that's just it; you don't see it," persisted the General. "I saw it, though. Do you know that as soon as you turn your back on one side of your band to shake your baton at the other those fellows all quit playing? Of course, you don't see it, for as soon as you turn around they begin again."—San Franciso

A Profitable Transaction. As an economist woman stands preeminent, when she chooses to keep run of the pennies that make a pound. One of the greatest specimens of economy that this age has ever developed is the system of handling herdic fares-invented by a fair Washingtonian. Her method is very simple. She takes the seat next the fare box and puts her ticket in. Then she waits for customers. When a passenger hands her a ticket she puts it in the box. When a nickel comes along, as it does very frequently, she keeps it and puts a ticket in the box. This represents a profit of five-sixths of a cent on each transaction and in the course of a trip 12 certain to pay the expenses of her ride, if it does ot realize her quite a substantial gain onsidering the amount of capital inrested and the entire absence of risk.
