HAND MEDICINE COMPANY,

DEAR SIRS:—

I have used

Dr. Hand's Remedies in my family these past eight years and find them more satisfactory than anything else I have ever tried. I first began using Dr. Hand's Teething Lotion when our oldest boy—now nine years old—was a baby; it gave him great relief and I recommended it to a number of others who were all highly pleased with the results. My baby was troubled greatly with colle, but as soon as I procured Dr. Hand's Colle Cure I had no more trouble, for a dose would relieve the little one in about five minutes. I could not get along without it in my house. When my friends saw how nicely it acted they sent and got some for their baoles. Yours.

MIMICRY OF INSECTS.

FOR SELF DEFENSE. Butterflies That Look Like Leaves, Moths That Mimie Wood and Stone and Insects

That Can Appear Like Dead Twigs-The Fakir in India. In wandering through one of the picturesque canyons of the Sierra Madre mountains one day I noticed coming down through the air with a peculiar motion a green leaf. It zigzagged from side to side and finally landed in a bush near at hand. Wondering merely why such a least would fall from a spruce tree, I would have passed on had not my dog, with more prescience, stopped and nosed the leaf, telling me, after his fashion, to look. This I did and found this green object that had come scurrying down was not a leaf at all, but a great green katydid, with gauze-like wings, protected by covers that were so exact in their imitation of other leaves in general that any one would have been deceived. The insect was a natural mimic, and even its flight downward from the tree was a protective one, calculated to deceive any feathered enemy that might have been in the vicinity. This phase of animal life, the feature of protective resemblances, is one well calculated to attract our attention and cause unceasing wonderment Nature has wisely endowed certain defenseless animals with a certain protective resemblance—made them mimics of their surroundings, so that they may avoid their enemies—and the extent to which this is carried among certain animals, especially insects, makes the study one of absorbing interest. In all life there is a certain adaptation to its peculiar surroundings. Gaily tinted birds are not, as a rule, found on white sandy wastes, but in forests where there is deep coloring and the contrast is not great The tawny lion, the giraffe, the ostrich, are forms which assimilate their surround ings. In California the horned toad is al most as invisible as the sand in which it lives. A-little canyon toad mimics the rocks upon which it rests in color, while the frogs of the cast are hardly distinguishable from the green reeds among which they hide. This peculiar method of defense is particularly marked among insects. Some years ago a traveling fakir stopped at a bungalow in India and offered for a small sum to show the guests of the sahib, who were new in India, a miracle. Told to go ahead, he produced a small tree with leaves about 3 inches long, which he thrust into the ground, then took from a large box carried by an attendanta dozen butterflies of great beauty. After the guests had examined them and assured themselves that the insects were alive, the fakir tossed them one by one into the air. Each alighted on the tree and became invisible. When all had disappeared, the fakir asked the sahib to look for them. The Englishman examined the tree carefully, but failed to find the dozen butterflies, each of which was four inches across They had all heard of the Indian hypnotism, and thought that this possibly was an instance in hand, but the laughing fakir caught up the tree, and, giving it a shake, the insects floated in the air for a moment, and then gathered about the tree, again to mysteriously The fakir then pointed out the illusion The butterflies were not a foot from their eyes and so mimicked the leaves when their wings were folded that the deception was perfect, both in color and shape. There were even the delicate mold spots, the central or midrib of the leaf and the delicate lateral branches from it, while the stem of the leaf was closely imitated by the lower portion of the wings, which were pressed against the stem. This mimie, known to science as kallina, if followed by a bird simply alights on a bush or tree and becomes invisible, and the fakir had simply taken advantage of the natural protection of the butterily.

The same protection is seen in many of our common butterflies that mimic flowers or leaves. Remarkable resemblances are noticed among the moths, some mimicking bits of wood or stone, so that when they alight they become at once invisible and thus escape from every possible pur-are found in India. A naturalist noted a butterfly here that was not only a remark able mimic, but when followed it imitat ed the peculiar flight of a poisonous but terfly that was obnoxious to the birds. In almost every group of insects we find this protective resemblance, and those among the walking sticks and walking leaves are the most wonderful. In the latter we have an example of an insect so exactly resembling a green leaf that it would bear close examination without discovery. The insect looks as though it might have been made up from several pieces of leaves. It is of a vivid green, with delicate leaves, exactly as one finds in a leaf. the phasnidae is a mimic of a twig or

While the phyllium resembles a leaf branch. The long straight body is a per fect stick, the legs resembling twigs branching from it, and when walking they move in so deliberate a manner that even then the illusion is not destroyed. A South American walking stick is a veritable giant, almost a foot in length. These are green, resembling young shoots, and are found among green verdure. But one observed by Bolt, the English naturalist, was a perfect mimic of a dead twig and had upon its sides and legs curious excrescences that mimicked fungous growths, so that the hird who had seen it moving would consider it nothing but a dried twig. The curious insects known as the mantis are remarkable for their powers of mimicry. Their movements are slow, their bodies and legs resemble twigs, and they are by this disguise enabled to creep upor their prey. One species has been known to seize and eat small birds, who, thinking it a bit of the branch, so fall into its clutches. Perhaps the most remarkable mimic among these insects is a pink mantis of India that is almost exact in its re-it by mistake.-Washington Star. American and German Teachers, I talked with Professor B. P. Bowne about American and foreign methods of education. "It is somewhat difficult to compare the two," he said, "the condition existing abroad are so utterly different from those in this country, but in Ger many, for instance, the university profess ors are specialists to such a degree that they really know nothing outside of their own specialties. It would not be surpris ing, for example, to find a German scien tist who knows nothing about the government under which he lives. Now, in this country a broad foundation is the best thing upon which a man can start to become a specialist—indeed, it is necessary that he should have such a foundation in order to become successful in any particular work."—Chautauqua Assembly Her-

At all times men knew the Duchesse de Gramont as a plair, homely, frank and ruthlessly outspokan woman and called her the "pockmarked duchess," Condemned to death by the revolutionary committee she said to it, "You are quite right to kill me, for I hate you all." And a little later, when she was late at her own execution, and the headsman impatiently bade her hurry, she answered, "On y va, canaille!" -Fortnightly Review.

Back. Patapsco Flouring Mills. THE "BISSELL CHILLED" PLOWS

ARE THE STANDARD PLOWS OF AMERICA The fact that three years ago it was comparatively unknown in this territory, and that its annual sates with us now mount into the many hundreds, prove that in the field it has shown its superiority. As is well-known the patterns are the latest of Mr. T. M. Bissell, the original inventor of the Chilled Plow. We believe there is no implement which the farmer changes more unwillingly than his favorite plow, but in the interest of supplying the best, we continue our offer, namely: Take a Bissell, put it in the field with any other chilled plow, and if our claims are not found true, which are that it is desirable in lightness of draft, case of handling and quality of work done, combined with improved mechanical construction, return it to us and purchase money will be refunded.

All sizes, right and left-hand with their repairs, kept constantly in stock, and the prices are so reasonable as to justify substituting "Bissells" for all old-style plows.

THE DEERE "SHAKER" POTATO DIGGER. THROWS THE POTATOES OUT OF THE GROUND AND LEAVES THEM -CLEAN AND WHOLE.---Potato digging, at best, is tedious work; and when done either with the hoe or the plow, the crop is unprofitable.

The 'Shaker' has a broad and perfectly that blade which enters the hill under the potatoes, and allows them to slide up on the olade and fall on the rods or fingers. The Rods and Fingers are hinged to the front end, and are free to play up and flown. The Flange Wheel in the rear lifts and drops these fingers: this motion causes a continuous shaking of the potatoes, knocking off the dist, which drops through between the rods, leaving the potatoes clean and free to roll off on top of the ground. The Weed Fender separates the weeds and vines and prepares the way for the shovel. The Digger has Metal Handles, well braced; all lies.
