McDonald Clarke Was the Victim of Senseless Practical Joke.

McDonald Clarke, who was known by the New York of 50 years ago as "the Mad Poet," died the victim of a cruel and senseless practical joke. So long as there are still persons cowardly enough to join in such base heaxing, his story should be read and remembered. He was of an exceedingly simple and unsuspecting nature, one of those whom all despised for "believing anything." One day he burst into the room of an artist friend, and exclaimed:

"I am going to be matried!" "What is the name of the lady?" asked the friend. "And when is the marriage to "The time is not definitely settled," said Clarke, "but it is coming off soon. The lady is the daughter of a well known bank president, and quite wealthy. The mother, evidently, from her manner, quite ap proves of the engagement."

Some young men who had heard these stories, and who knew Clarke's vivid imagination, determined to treat the whole thing as a joke. They wrote him a letter and signed it with the name of the young lady's father. In this letter much admir ation was expressed for the genius and high character of Clarke, and stress was laid upon the fact that an alliance with him might be considered an honor to any

The father added that he wished the wedding to be conducted in a suitable style. He could not offer Clarke a loan he said, and suggested, as a more dignified course, that the prospective bridegroom should make out a note for a given time, and present it at the bank to be cashed. Absurd as this proposition was, Clarke prepared the note, in good faith, and sent t in to the president, who became very an gry and pronounced the whole thing a vile imposition. He even went further and declared that no one but a madman could

e so imposed upon. Clarke had too sensitive a nature to rally rom the blow. He rushed wildly out of the bank and was found by a watchman that night on his knees in St. Paul's churchyard. He was taken to a place of confinement and locked up, and there, before morning, he died.—Youth's Compan

NOBLEMEN FOR OFFICERS. Birth, Not Merit, Seems to Count In the German Army. According to the latest "almanach" of the German army, there seems to be little chance for any one not of noble birth to attain any but a low ranking in that vast ghting machine.

There are 66 generals in the infantry cavalry and artillery, and there are but two who do not belong to the nobility. These two, however, are what in England would be classed as "gentry" and are not of common origin by any means. Among the 75 lieutenant generals there are but 13 of bourgeois extraction. Of major generals there are 140, and all but 38 of these are of noble birth. Two hundred and six of the 294 colonels have a right to wear titles. It will be seen from this that the higher commands of the German army remain in the hands of the aristocracy, which is strictly in keeping with the theory that only those who have been accustomed for generations to rule over their fellow men by right of birth are fit for military com-There are 49 regiments in the German army where all the officers without exception are members of the nobility, and there are 21 other regiments whose rigid rule it is never to admit an officer below the grade of sous lieutenant who is not of noble birth. Caterpillars and Eye Diseases.

It will come as a surprise to many of our readers that caterpillars are responsible for an affection of the eyes which may entail prolonged suffering and even result in se rious damage to vision. That such is the case has been abundantly proved by a num ber of instances on record in which more or less intractable inflammation of the eyes has been found to be associated with the presence of hairs which, after removal, have been identified as belonging to the genus caterpillar. At the last meeting of the Ophthalmological society a case was related in which a lad was struck in the related in which a lad was struck in the eye by a caterpillar thrown at him by a playful schoolfellow. He picked up the intect to examine it, and the hand which select it became red and developed papules and other indications of local irritation. day or two later the eye became the scat of what proved to be a very troublesome inflammation, associated with the presence if rounded elevations due to an accumula tion of cells around the imbedded bairs which were subsequently discovered and removed. The presence of these papules as led to the somewhat unsatisfactory because pondescriptive, name of ophthal-mia nodosa being conferred upon the dis-gase,—London Medical Press.

A Horrible Story of the Sea. One of the most grewsome tales dug up out of the misty past is that told by the York (Me.) Courant of the wreck of the Nottingham Galley on Boon island. This yessel, which was bound to Boston from London, was driven on the island in a terrible gale on the night of Dec. 11, 1719. The weather was so dreadful that some of the sufferers soon died. There was nothing to got but shreds of rawhide, rockweed and a few mussels. After a few days two of the mon attempted to get to York on a raft, but were drowned. At last the hun ger of the survivors became so raging that they are some of the flesh of their dead comrades, and, having no fire, must per-force swallow this raw. Immediately their dispositions, which had been kind and helpful, seemed to undergo a total change. Instead of praying they began to swear and quarrels commenced. At last, after 23 days of this horrible life, they were respued, being then mere skeletons and una-ble to walk. A lighthouse was prected on the Island in 1811.

AN INSECT'S QUEER APPETITE. It Prefers a Diet of Ocean Cables to Anything Else. A curious fact was brought under th attention of the visitors assembled at the opening of the Telephone Trunk lines. A portion of the cable laid across from Portpatrick to Donaghadee was shown around, and it was pointed out that the five insulated copper wires constituting the core of the cable—the real telegraphic conductorwere incased in a sheathing of brass which had been wound around them in the form of a thin metal tape. The object of this was to protect the gutta percha insulation from the attack of a minute marine organism known as the "gribble." There was a ting of course, when the gribble knew nothing about telegraphic insulating materials, and indeed over a large part of the

But the cra of marine telegraphy seem to have created a new tasto in these tiny creatures wherever cables have been laid down, just as animals of larger proportions have acquired the taste for bananas or potted anchovies. They find their way in between the sheathing of strong iron wire and eat through everything in the way of insulating material till they get to the copper strands, when, of course, the water gets in, and the conducting power of the cable is at an end.

sea bottom such modern luxuries are quit

The curious fact is that the ravages o the gribble were unknown in the early days of ocean telegraphy, and that this peculiar taste is not only an acquired one but seems to be extending in just the same way as the acquired tastes of human beings. At present the fashion of gutta percha cating does not go farther north than Portpatrick. But it has long been moving northward and will probably soon be universal. The brass proves an effectual barrier so far, but whether these little denizens of the deep may not by and by find even metal tape a piquant addition to their larder remains to be seen.—London News.

OPERATIC STARS. Sir Augustus Harris Tells How He Di

covers and Secures Them.

During a performance at the Drury Lat heater Sir Augustus Harris had a tall with an interviewer. He explained how ie finds his operas and his artistes. "From every great musical city in the world I receive information as to the operatic discoveries, and I follow them up. No opera singer comes out without getting under my notice or that of my friends. As soon as I receive news of anything I send out to have the information substantiated. I could not myself be all the time looking up every one who is mentioned to me, for many of the reported swans turn out miserable geese. However, I go about once a year to judge for myself on a tour of in-

"Then I get all the leading foreign pa pers and musical publications. Wednesday's Figaro gives you many of the important inusical events in all the big cities in Europe, and as soon as that Parisiai paper arrives here it is studied and noted. So, you see, immediately I hear of new artistes I know all about them before having to go and hear them. I obtain experts' opinion, find out what price is necessary to secure their services, etc., and then decide. It requires some considerable instinct, for a singer may create a furore on the continent and fall terribly flat when brought over here.

"Of course I hear many, many people sing, but it is a rare thing to find a true artiste. I just sit here and watch and watch. You see my company is different from others. I do not entirely rely on one bright particular star, as was the custon in the past, but I depend on all round ex-

Human Storage of Caloric.

There is some danger to the novice in going into semitropical regions in being unacquainted with and unprepared for the degree of apparent cold which he is likely to find, to his great surprise. And when he looks at the thermometer he is further surprised to see it so high while his feelings indicate a much lower temperature. He is still more astonished to notice that the natives do not mind the cold that makes the novice shiver. The fact is that, without his accustomed fire and house warming facilities and subjected to all currents, the practical temperature in its physiological effects is much lower than the thermometer registers. In Spain, Italy and in general along th Mediterranean shore they have a semi tropical climate during eight or nine months of the year, during which time the native inhabitants hold their calorifacient function in reserve, and when they reach their short and moderately cold season they have no difficulty in drawing suffl ciently on their reserve heatmaking power. The man from the north has no such re serve, and what he has the temperature is not sufficiently stimulating to call into full activity. He has used up his caloric

A prodigious quantity of high class pa per having the label "linen" affixed to it has for years been upon the market. It is of course, the best paper known, but there is really no paper made wholly of linen, excepting as it is produced for special purposes, such as for bonds, etc. The best paper is made of linen and new cotton rags, in about equal proportions. The cleansing of the rags and the bleaching of the pulp nowadays receive extraordinary care-the cleaner the rags the less necessity for chemicals, and, therefore, with new rags, such as clippings of new cloth from factories of certain kinds, the quantity of chemicals needed is insignificant, and these rags, having neither absorbed much of them no suffered from their action, make of course the best paper, for the failure to remove or "kill" the bleach would injure the paper and have a deleterious effect upon ink.
