THE DOLLAR MARK.

Its Possibility in Being Written Before Instead of After Figures.

Did it ever strike you as being at all peculiar that we should have the dollar mark ($) before instead of after the figures in expressing the sum of 5, 10, 20 or any other number of dollars? We may say "25 dollars" in English for any one to understand, but as soon as we put the expression into figures and characters it is "dollars 25" ($25), instead of 25, as it should be. Now is this all that is peculiar in this connection?

In every country which has a written language and a system of coinage the abbreviation for the unit of value precedes the figures. In England the pound mark (£) is used in the same manner that the dollar mark is used in this country, while the same peculiarity is noticeable in Germany, where the abbreviation for the mark appears preceding the number, just as the French abbreviation for the franc is used in France.

The English pound sign, which is believed to be the oldest monetary abbreviation now in use, is the old initial letter by which the Romans expressed "pounds," just as we use the "lb." It has been suggested that we use our money abbreviation backward. We can not do this, because the character was used, it always precedes the figures, thus "£10," instead of the reverse. Thus the whole world has gotten in the habit of doing these things backward.—St. Louis Herald.

CHARACTER IN FEET.

It Can Be Accurately Read Every Time, According to a Chiropodist.

Nobody thinks of "tracing" without thinking of "tracing" the feet. After having been slighted for centuries, the human foot is now being traced to draw attention to this much abused member of the human body. Why hadn't somebody thought of it before?

"Why, do you know," said a gentleman who is looked up to as one of the leading intellectual lights, "I have a friend who is a chiropodist in the metropolis, a gentleman of unquestioned learning and veracity, who has made a study of the matter for years, and he tells me that the human foot is the most interesting index to character that has ever been discovered. 'People say they can detect character' in the countenance, but let me examine a man's foot and I will tell you what he is like," says his friend. In every instance where I have taken the trouble to follow out his instructions I have found them to be absolutely correct.

"You can tell a fiery temper from the shape of his foot as easily as you can tell a phlegmatic from his face. As there are all sorts of temperaments, so there are all varieties of feet. Each temperature leaves its foot mark, and if the chiropodist would spend their time in investigating this matter instead of what the planets we should have some practical data from which we could determine in a few moments whether a man could be trusted to handle large sums of money and thus do away entirely with the necessity of giving bonds. If a merchant wanted a salesman, he would not need to ask for recommendations; he would merely request to see the applicant's feet, and he would know instantly whether or not he was the man he wanted. I tell you, now that Du Maurier has popularized feet so that scientists will never look for them, but lay them on one upon which to expend their energies, you may expect some wonderful discoveries to result from the study in a few years."— Rochester Herald.

A Dog Mince.

Rev. Frank M. Downing of Moore county, Tenn., is the owner of a most remarkable dog called Bench. In appearance the animal is not prepossessing, his color being a dirty yellow, his hair coarse and wiry, his legs short and his body rather unwieldy. In his eyes, however, there gleams an intelligence almost human. At the word of command Bench will crawl to a shaggy post, neigh like a horse, howl like a dog, or bark like a dog in imitation of pigs, mew like a cat and repeat the various voices incident to farm life. He can give all the yelps of a pack of hounds in pursuit of a fox and in so realistic a manner that you could scarcely help believing that a hunt was in progress.

This dog was never trained to do this, but as a puppy picked up the cries of the farmyard and has added to them the croaking of wagons and the whirring of machinery as made by the mill. Mr. Downing has been offered fabulous sums for the wonderful dog, but refuses to part with him. Trained animal keepers who have trained Bench and his family with his powers of mimicry say that it would be an easy matter to teach the dog to articulate words, perhaps even to talk coherently.—Chicago Times-Herald.

Eating, Rest and Recreation.

A physician once said, "It does not so much matter what we eat as how we eat it." While this is only partly true, it certainly is true that most healthful food, especially eaten and digested, is followed by work which engages the entire available physical and mental forces, is much worse than a meal of poor food, or what is usually termed indigestible food, which is eaten leisurely and followed by an interval of rest. While the quality and quantity of foods have much to do with health, the manner of eating has quite as much, if not more, to do with keeping up the tone of the system to a natural, healthy point. All meals, but especially dinner, should be followed by a short rest, so a short rest will keep the tone of the body better during the day, and it is always best to be on the side-saddle. After supper there should be no work, but recreation.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Sharpened Senses.

In showing how our sense is sharpened to supply the loss of another, Dr. S. M. Hillington Miller writes that Mr. Alexander Hunter of the land office at Washington, thought entirely deaf, spelled without mistake 150 words read to him from the dictionary. He has become able to read the motion of the lips of those addressing him. This faculty is not rare among the deaf, and by means of it, as in the case of Mrs. Mitchell, the chemist of the United States patent office, have been able to understand the lectures necessary for their graduation at college.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Efficient Terrible.

Mr. Courtney (lettering)—I had the blues when I came here tonight, Miss Fisher, but all gone now. You are a good girl indeed.

ONE PUDDING 204 FEET LONG.

Eaten in a Trench. It Was a Feast For Many Villagers.

I had been ten years on Savage Island and meant to come to England on a visit, but before leaving went to each village to see how the people were getting on. We had been three weeks from home when we got to a little village called Liku.

The evening after our arrival there was a terrible storm. Rain, wind, and children were running about with some carrying sticks, some logs of wood and some big stones.

The men began digging a long shallow trench with their sharp pointed sticks. The boys brought big stones and firewood. These were piled up all along one side of the trench. The wood was then set fire to and was soon blazing, while the stones on the top were getting hot.

While the fire was burning one side little bundles of something white and soft were being made from the clear lumps that contained them. This was the pudding of which the pudding was made. It was not called or made, but like banana leaves. Over this long cocoon leaves were placed.

When the stones were hot enough, some were quickly laid along the bottom of the trench; then the long pudding was laid on the top of them and from some stones at the sides and on the top.

Some girls had brought heaps of leaves to lay over the top to keep the heat and steam in, and the earth which had been dug out of the trench was thrown over the top.

The coals and pudding makers all went to sleep and left the stove for their cookery. Next morning at 8 o'clock the village was astir, men, women and children all in holiday attire.

It was soon discovered and was found to be well done. Long poles were brought and laid the whole length. These were fastened to the pudding by small vines, came, etc. It was then rolled out of the trench on one side, sticks were laid acrosswise to the poles, and all was ready for taking up.

About 100 men and boys then raised it by their shoulders, and with one tremendous shout started toward my house, accompanied by the whole village.

I measured it before carrying and found it was 204 feet long—no longer, and the monument of London is high. It measured 13 inches in circumference. It was soon carried into pieces four yards long and these were laid out on the ground, men carrying as much pudding as their strength would allow to distant villages.—English Exchange.

How One Should Shake Hands.
Few of those who shake the hands of public men on occasions of receptions held in their honor realize the effect of this process if long continued upon the hand who submits to it. Inquiry of them would often elicit the fact that there were swollen hands or strained muscles and badly afflicted nerves as a result of this habit.

"I once ran for highway commissioner," observed Deacon Froude, "and the other man and I got exactly the same vote."
"How do you settle this?" asked Elder Krespling.

"I offered to receive the matter by tossing a copper cent, but I said that was gambling, and I wouldn't gamble if I never got an office in the world. So we pulled straws for it, and I got the right one. There's a little trick at pulling straws," added the good Deacon with a twinkle in his eye. "That everybody doesn't know. I'm generally pretty lucky at pull' straws."—Chicago Tribune.

Modest Chicago.
Here is a modest allusion to Chicago in The News of that city: "She has been famous for her existence a day and a night on the ashes. She has built a demand for the world to play in and thought little of the achievement. She has essayed a drainage canal, and before the people hardly know of it the bulk of the gigantic enterprise is completed and the glorification exercises are over. This is not boasting; it is a modest recording of a glittering sparkling radiating fact. It is a meekly testimonial of the grand, whooping, inspiring vastness of the greatest aggregation of human souls ever brought together under one municipal canvas."
