They Do Not Come Up All at Once, Nor Do They Grow Forever. Mushrooms do not come up all at once nor do they grow forever. If the spawn is good and planted early in September, from four to five, and sometimes six, weeks will expire before the first crop of mushrooms makes its appearance.

The first crop will flow for two or three weeks; then the mushrooms will thin out, and a slight dressing of fresh loam, about half an inch in depth, should be spread over the bed. When this coating has been beaten down with a spade, the soil should be gently moistened with tepid water, and in a day or two a second crop of mushrooms—often better than the first—can be gathered. The second crop of mushrooms may last for three or four weeks, and about the latter part of December the spawn will be found to have exhausted itself, and fresh manure, fresh spawn and fresh loam must be procured for the forma-tion of new beds if another crop of mush-

To grow mushrooms successfully great care must be taken to obtain fresh spawn, which can be bought in all the horticultural stores. But if the cultivator wishes to make his own spawn, he can do so by following these directions: Take equal portions of horse droppings, cow dung and fresh loam and mix the whole thoroughly together, as you would make mortar. Then form the matter into cakes about the size of a large brick. Place these bricks on edge under cover until they become half dry, then insert into each brick piece of spawn half an inch or so square and let the bricks remain until they are quite dry. Then spread about eight inches of horse dung over the floor of the shed, on which build the bricks in a pile, keeping the side in which the spawn has been put uppermost Then cover the pile of bricks over with sufficient stable manure so as to give a gentle heat, not exceeding 100 degrees, through the whole. In two or three weeks the spawn will have spread it-self through the whole mass of each brick and will be ready to plant at any time during the winter.-New York Times.

CAITHNESS SUPERSTITIONS. Some of the Curlous Methods Adopted I Sickness and Death. A method much in vogue at one time of ascertaining whether a sickness would prove fatal was to dig two holes in the ward which he turned indicated what would be the outcome of his malady. Sometimes a piece of rock was broken over the head of a person whose last agonies were painful alike to himself and o those who witnessed them. It was be lieved that the heart of the sick man would thus be broken and his release hastened. Windows and doors are always thrown wide open in order that the departing spirit may have free egress from the house and escape from the evil ones that hover around eager to inthrall his soul. During the interval between death and burial hens and cats were kept carefully shut up. A person meeting these animals at such a juncture was doomed to blindness in the future. Moreover, unless a stream divided the two houses, farmers frequently refrained from yoking their oxen or horses before the body was "laid under the turf of truth." Many women Bread and water were placed in the champreserved with the greatest reverence their bridal attire to cover them in the coffin. the burial the spirit of the departed one | market. came to partake of them. Stillborn children and little ones who had not been blessed by the minister were buried before sunrise. In this way their admission to the land of promise was assured. Not to observe the practice was to destine the souls of these bairns to wander homeless and disconsolate. The fate of the suicide is lamentable. His body cannot rest in the kirkyard, for it would taint the souls of those who lie therein; frequently he was buried in a lone dike which separated two lairds' estates, and passersby were expected to cast a pubble at the rude stone which marked the place.—Scottish Review.

That he who runs may read is especially rue of those who travel on the trains of the elevated roads. The other day, just before the Bleecker street station was reached, a glance in at a window of a tenement near there showed a scene that has haunted its witness since. In what was probably the one room of a family, for bed, stove and washtubs occupied almost all of the space, sat a woman with a baby perhaps a year old, in her lap. And such a baby! Thin, weazen, old before its time and evidently dying, for each panting breath was a struggle. Over mother and child bent a middle aged man, undoubted ly the doctor, with his finger at the baby's wrist. One glance told the story. The fast graying face of the child, the agon ized look of the mother, the doctor's pity ing expression, all were photographed in second of time from the window of that elevated car, with a distinctness that will not soon fade.—New York Times.

A carelessly worded theatrical contract often means a heavy loss. For instance, Florence St. John was engaged by H. J. Leslie for the opera "Dorothy." Unfortunately, she was taken ill and was actually never able to play in the piece at all Nevertheless the manager was compelled by the wording of the contract to pay her £60 a week for nearly 12 months. So rigidly is the letter of the agreement adhered to that an actor engaged for the Globa will refuse to play at the Galety, and an netress whose contract is worded "comic opera" will decline her part if the piece should afterward be entitled a burlesque.

This celebrated Lightning Conductor, owing to the material of which it is made and the manner of its construction, is the most complete protection against disaster by lightning ever invented. This is conclusively shown by a practical test of a great many years, during which time it has been in constant use, being erected upon many thousands of private and public buildings, in all sections of the country; and although there have fallen upon it, in numerous instances, most terrific discharges of electricity, yet in no instance has it failed to conduct harmlessly to the earth, thus saving many lives and property of almost incalculable value.

P.O. Ellicott City. Md. TRAINING CARRIER PIGEONS. Message Bearers.

How They Are Taught to Act as Reliable De Witt C. Lockwood writes an account of the "Carrier Pigeons of Santa Catalina," describing the rapid mail service established between two places, in St. Nicholas. He says: It must be understood, however, that in certain pigeons, especially those known as the Belgian variety, the homing instinct is developed in a remarkable degree, and it is the birds' intense love of home and the almost unvarying certainty of their re-turn thither after having been taken some distance away and then released which make them valuable as carriers. The methods used in training a pigeon for special service are not by any means similar, as many persons seem to think. to those employed in teaching a dog to run after a stick, or a white spotted pony to dance the polka. A carrier's education (consists in conveying him away from home and letting him go, when he simply flies back to the loft where he belongs. This sounds almost as thrilling as the story of the enterprising mouse that first ran up the clock and then ran down again and of course it conveys no idea of the immense amount of care and patience involved in the rearing and breeding of the birds—the special cultivation of those qualities which produce the best results,

In training the birds for Catalina three or four were usually placed together in a pasteboard box, perforated with hole about the size of a quarter of a dollar They were carried to a spot a mile or so from the loft, in a direct line for the coast and Catalina, and released. A few days later the same birds were taken a greater distance away—say three or four miles from home—and liberated. In this manner the several succeeding journeys were gradually lengthened until San Pedro, the scaport of Los Angeles, 22 miles distant, Then the pigeons were taken aboard the steamer and set at liberty a few miles out at sea, increasing the distance upon the four occasions that followed, until at last the end of the route was reached and the birds would fly, without fail, across the sea and over the land to their home.

WINE DRINKERS' MAXIMS. Saylings of Our Elders and a Contribution From Theodore Roosevelt. Jocoso remarks, friendly toasts and cheery greetings rather than profound philosophical truths are to be sought usually among those who continuously find solace in wine drinking. But there is some liter ature of wine proverbs, so called, in which there is an admixture of wit and sagacity. "A cellar without wine, a home without woman and a purso without money are three deadly plagues," is one of the oldes and best known of the wine proverbs. "Red wine poisons oysters," is another. "Wine is a turncoat—first a friend, then an enemy," is a third. "Burgundy," it is an old saying, "is the wine of princes, Sillery of nobles, claret of the gentle born and beer of the common people." It seems to be a fair inference that those who have gone to the trouble of compiling in various works the apothegms of wine drinkers have chosen them as a good cultivator chooses the best grapes, with much careand when the authors of such remarks were not drinking. "Champagne," it is a wine drinker's saying, "is like criticismnothing more execrable if bad, nothing more excellent if good." "Love," says another, "stole its purple light from the wine cup." Here is another, "The bottle We are still Making Suits to Order from $10.00 up, Fit Guarantee is of the aristocracy, treated like a gentleman." "Drink your enemy's wine. It's as good as your friend's," is an inhospitable but not unphilosophic saying, and, "remember," says another, "olives and wine tell what a man is." One recent saying of a wine drinker does not find a place in the collected maxims heretofore published, but later it may. Theodore Roosevelt, police commissioner, declared at a dinner a few years ago, "There is not one idea in a keg of beer." -New York Sun.

"'Young man, kin you tell me whar! kin put up $10 on the wheat market?'
"'I kin, says he. 'Jest gimme yer money and I'll buy ye a thousand bushels. "I gin him the money, and we stood around fur awhile, and then went into a place to look at what they calls a ticker.

Arter he'd looked the young man says:
"'Ole man, she's broke five pints, and you are closed out. She's sure to turn though, and you'd better put up another "And did you?" I asked.
"Waal, yes. I put up another five, and the market went up, and I cleared $3. Then she went down, and I lost the hull thing. Then I got kinder excited and put up $15 all to once. In about five minutes the young man said if Chicago kept out of the deal I'd make a cool hundred. Five minits later Chicago jumped in, and I lost my $15."

"And then you quit?" "Waal, yes—that is, the young feller asked if I had any more money to bull the market with, and when I said no he did the quittin. I was lookin around fur him when a man told me I'd bin swindled. I was mad 'nuff to bust at fust, but I guess won't do nuthin about it. I've seen Wall street. The lamb has met the lion, and the lamb wasn't in it!" "But the experience will be valuable to "Yes, she will. Jest about the time?" realized I'd bin swindled a feller cum along and asked me where Broadway was, and I hauled off and knocked him head over heels down a basement! You bet they don't git ahead of me agin in this town!
