THE BARITONE SINGER.

An Amusing Incident In the Career of

Mr. Clifford Halle. Clifford Halle, son of Sir Charles Halle, one of England's most famous musicians (who, by the way, was knighted by the queen some years ago), said to the writer: "I recollect a funny thing that occurred in Port Elizabeth, South Africa, when I was traveling through that country as a baritone singer. The town is rather provincial, and the poundmaster never con siders that he has any duties to perform. The hall where I sang was in a portion of the village where donkeys, goats and other domestic animals held considerable of the available space. The night was warn and the main entrance was left open for the purpose of permitting fresh air to en-

"I had already sung two or three num bers and was announced to render a ballad well known in that part of the world, entitled 'Thou Art Passing Hence, My Brother.' It is full of sympathy and feeling, and as the audience seemed to be alive to my work I did my very best. The or-chestra was reasonably good. I had the audience pretty well under control. The conclusion of the song contains the words, 'Brother, brother,' and just as I reached them and my voice was dring away and everybody seemed spellbound a full grown donkey stuck his head in the door and 'Ye-haw-w-w! Ye-haw-w-w! seemingly in answer to my words.

"The audience went into convulsions and the applause I anticipated was turned there and conclude the programme. Th violinist was all broken up over the accident, and walking up to me with his bow in his hand said, 'Say, Halle, if you expect to make a success of this South Afri ca tour you have got to keep your relative away from the front door.' "On another occasion I sang for the king of Swaziland, old Umbandine, and I had for an audience his 600 wives. Young Shepstone, son of the famous Theopholis Shepstone, the man who plunged England into the Zulu war, was with me, and our orchestra consisted of two banjos. We sang light music, and in concluding I gave them a trill. The old king jumped down from his throne, rushed up to me down from his throne, rushed up to me and wanted to examine my throat. I did it for him several times, and he finally concluded that he could do it himself. The result was a sound that reminded one of a broken snare drum being played by a small boy. He tackled it for two or three days and gave it up on the ground that his throat wasn't built right. He tried to teach it to several of his family, but without success. It was about the only thing I did that seemed to please him, and from that time on until I left I indulged in nothing but songs that had a tall in the nothing but songs that had a trill in them. Ho always made a close examination after each piece, and finally stated that there something the matter wi Francisco Call.

The Use of Weeds.

"It is a very common thing," said an old farmer, "for people to grumble about weeds and wonder of what use they are in the economy of nature. Indeed a great many persons appear to think that they are of no value whatever except as a means of discipline to tillers of the soil. I admit that they have their inconveniences, but so have most of the things we have to encounter during our lifetime. If farmers and gardeners only realized it, weeds are among their best friends. There is nothing more valuable as a fertilizer than a big. ing more valuable as a fertilizer than a big plle of weeds and sod and the roots that are dug up out of the garden. Properly cared for and allowed to decay, then mixed with some good land dressing and put back into the earth, they furnish precisely the nutriment that the growing plants re-rob the soil as most ordinary garden and field products do, and it is not anything uncommon for farmers to allow some wornout field to lie fallow for a few seasons and recuperate. An enormous quantity of weeds will spring up, which will, after scattering seeds galore, wither down and die and return to the soil whence they sprang. A few seasons of this kind of treatment furnishes the earth with a sufficient supply of participant to peak its seasons. cient supply of nutriment to make it again valuable for crops."—New York Ledger.

Calcutta's Docks.

Among the most notable systems of dock construction achieved by modern engineering science Calcutta may be said to present a conspicuous example. The entrance to these docks is through a channel 80 feet wide, and a lock 60 feet wide, terminating in a basin measuring 600 by 680 feet. Two entrances, 60 by 30 feet wide, lead from this basin into the dock proper, which is 2,600 feet long, 60 feet wide for the greater part of its length, and covers 814 perces. er part of its length, and covers 341/2 acres, two dry docks also leading off from the basin, one of them 520 feet long and the other 350 feet. While the river is low these waterways are supplied with fresh water from the neighborhood, and elaborate provision is made to remove the mud from this water before it is pumped into the basin. The docks are equipped with 55 movable hydraulic cranes, of which 50 are constructed to lift as much as 134 tons, while the remainder can handle weights of 5 tons, all of them overhanging the quay 29 feet, and operated by water under pressure, as are also the lock gates, constans and swing bridges about the docks. The water is under a pressure of 700 pounds, and is furnished by two pairs of hydraulic engines, each of 230 horsepower.—New York Sun.

Where Was the Garden of Eden? Arguments that have seemed sound to their scientific projectors have been advanced to prove that the human race started on the brink of the Euphrates, in the heart of central Asia, in Lemuria, a continent supposed to be at present at the bottom of the northern part of the Indian ocean; in Greenland, in central Africa, in Central America, in Ceylon and in the fabled continent of Atlantis, which is con jectured to have emerged from the Atlan tic on the line of the Canary islands and the Azores, and from which, if it ever existed, both the eastern and the western hemispheres might have drawn their pop ulation. Certainly here is choice enough writes Edward S. Martin in The Ladies' Home Journal

The scientific searcher after paradise is embarrassed by the richness of his field and hesitates to leave the Euphrates' bank and become a wanderer over all the earth. But at least he may stick to Asia if he will. One of the most favored "cradles of the human race" is the vast plateau of Pamir, north of the Himalayas in central Asia. Anthropologists find deep significance in the fact that in that region the fundamental types of all the races of mankind are represented. In the plateau of Pamir or within easy distance of it are yellow people, black people and whites, and in the same region philologists find the three fundamental forms of the human

The deckhands had just swept out the gentlemen's cabin, and were even then washing the floor. Two young men came in, sat down on the sid which had just been washed and began to cat peanuts. The deckhands who were sweeping were not afraid to do their duty for they had very quickly subdued a drunk en tough who got boisterous, and the plainly saw the young men throw the pea-nut shells on the clean floor, but they no more thought of objecting than they would think of dictating to a man what kind of clothes he should wear. They respected the Inability to remember names is a failing common to a great many people. There are varying degrees of the malady, of course, but nearly every one has had the experience of going to call upon one of his most intimate friends, and suddenly, as he ascended the steps and was about to ring the bell, finding himself utterly unwas to ask for. This performance, however, has been completely distanced by the feat of Mrs. S——, who lives up town and now holds the palm among her acquaintances for this sort of absentmindedness. On the occasion of the death of a distant relative recently she was obliged to go down to the surrogate's court to attend to some business regarding the will. In the sary for her to sign her maiden name to the document in question. The clerk handed her the pen, fold her where the

Now York Herald.

A new theory as to how lightning kills but one which may well be held in abey anco until a clearer solution of it can l presented, is just now being urged by the scientists. According to this new fangle idea, a person is never "struck" by light ning at all, that is, in the general sense of the word quoted. The new theory is the result of deductions that have been made along the following lines: All life is elec tric. In the human body the stomach is the generator and the brain the battery When a person is killed by lightning, h is not "struck" at all, but dies because o a sudden loss of the electric power which had been impelling his physical engine. The loss of this vital fluid, if such it may be called, is brought about in this man ner: A thundercloud is passing over. I is charged with positive electricity and th earth beneath is charged negatively. Th human electric battery is between. If the cloud is charged heavily enough, it sapa the negative electricity from the earth using the human being as a conductor, and finally leaves him lifeless by taking his electricity with that from the earth. This theory is in line with that which orig-Inated a few years ago, and which was to the effect that it was the "up stroke"

Terribly Tormented. The following conversation is reported to have taken place between a minister and a widow, both of Aberdeen. The wid ow, who called upon the minister, seemed desirous of relieving her mind of something which oppressed her, at which the reverend gentleman, wishing to hurry matters, exclaimed: "My good woman, you see I can be of no service to you till you tell me what it is that troubles you.
