Dr. Fahrney's Teething Syrup is preferred by mothers because it is perfectly harmless to the most delicate infant. Not an atom of injurious drugs in a gallon of it. It takes baby through the entire period of teething in comparative comfort. Cures colle in ten minutes; relieves THE QUIET HOUSE.

Oh, mothers, worn and weary With cares that never cease, With never time for pleasure, With days that have no peace, With little hands to hinder

And feeble steps to guard, With tasks that lie unfinished,

I know a house where playthings
Are hidden out of sight;
No sound of childish footsteps
Is heard from morn till night,

No tiny hands to litter, That pull things all awry, No baby hurts to pity

As the quiet days go by. And she, the sad eyed mother, What would she give today

To feel your cares and burdens,
To walk your weary way?

Ah, happy she—yea, blessed—
Could she again but see The rooms all strewn with playthings
And the children round her knee!

THE BEATEN ARMADA

FEARFUL FATE OF SPAIN'S BOASTED INVINCIBLE FLEET.

The Big Galleons, Battered and Riddled With Shot by the Little English Fleet Were Sent Drifting Toward the Shoals Begging Sidonia to Surrender.

"The Spanish Armada" is the subject of an article in The Century written by William Frederic Tilton, with an introduction by Captain Alfred T. Mahan. Mr. Tilton says of the defeat of the "invinci-

In Spain the progress and fortunes of the armada had naturally been the one all absorbing theme of boasting or conjecture, in palace and monastery, in street and shop. From every altar of the land fervent prayers for its success were rising. The king himself passed hours of every day upon his knees before the sacrament, and those in waiting on him declared that he often rose in the night, sighing to heaven

And now came Mendoza's good news. Yet the king, feverish as was his longing for success, was too old a player to put absolute trust in his embassador's confused report, for the sanguine, magniloquent Mendoza had a reputation for "deceiving himself." So Philip in an agony of conflicting doubt and hope shut himself up in the Escurial and would give no one audience until he should receive more certain

While Mendoza's ridiculous rumors were circulating through the courts of the continent the armada was in reality flying, crippled and miserable, into the fogs and gales of the German ocean. For Philip's fleet, if not actually conquered, had been fire of the English gunners in the great fight off Gravelines. When the Spanish admiral, the Duke of Medina Sidonia, counted over his ships after the battle, several were missing, among them those of the two heroes of the day on the Spanish side, the dashing, irresistible soldier sailors Toledo and Pimentel, who, having fought till, in the words of a Spanish oflicer present, their crack galleons were "knocked in pieces and the crews nearly all dead or wounded," drifted in the black night, helpless or rather unhelped, away

Writing of the ultimate fate of this splendid fleet, Captain Alfred T. Mahan

Yet the armada had not been utterly routed, and Elizabeth's captain knew this full well. In the evening, just after the fighting had ceased, Howard wrote home that he had "distressed them much," and, though he doubted not, "by God's good assistance to oppress them," yet he would not "write unto her majesty till more be done." And even jubilant Drake, who, with the insight of the great sea captain, had at once appreciated almost to its full extent the success achieved at Gravelines, which makes one sleepy. As the days still expected to "wrestle a pull" with the Spaniards and was keeping a sharp eye upon them night and day.

In spite of their exhaustion the Spanlards had scarce closed their eyes during the night after Gravelines, fearing every moment to hear their ships strike on the treacherous banks which skirt the Low Country coast. Soon after day broke their fears were all but realized. The wind had gradually edged to the northward and was now blowing hard from the northwest. This must have been a fair enough wind for Calais; but Sidonia had no stomach for another fight, and owing to their crippled state his ships, had sailer; at best, were now falling off to leeward toward the low line of shoals. With terror the Spaniards saw in front of them the great waves breaking into gray foam on the smooth sands and close behind them the pursuing English fleet. Sidonia was lagging behind with his stout hearted lieutenants, Recald and Leyva. The pilots declared that the fleet that speedily. Chicken hearted officers begged Sidonia to strike his colors and at least save ships and lives, but the admiral confessed himself and resolved to die, if die he must, like a true knight of the cross. The English, however, did not attack, believing, as the Spaniards afterward concluded, that the armada was drifting of itself to sure destruction. Suddenly by a miracle, as the Spaniards piously thought, the wind veered to the southward. The armada, rescued from the shoals only to suffer a more terrible fate, eased sheets and sailed out into the deep North sea, closely followed by the English. Shaken by the terrible strain of the last ten days and now utterly unnerved by the narrowness of this last escape from the very jaws of death, Sidonia was in a panic of doubt and despair. So, hastily sum-moning a council of war, he asked whether he ought to sail back into the channel. It was voted to do so if the wind came fair, otherwise to "obey the weather" and sail north about to Spain, for, it was urged, holes, the rigging was terribly cut up and the ammunition was nearly all consumed. Promising to turn back if the wind shifted, Sidonia headed his ragged fleet for the

The fate of the Spanish armada stands conspicuous among the great catastrophes of war narrated by history. According to the estimate of the Spanish captain Duro, who has made a close study of the records in his own country, out of 130 sail of which the armada was composed when it left Lisbon on May 30, 1588, 63 were lost. Of these only nine fell in battle or in immediate consequence thereof, although the injuries received in the various actions in the channel doubtless contributed to while I was engaged in a desperate under-All of these branches can be taken at | the ultimate shipwreck of many. Of these last it is possible that some of the smaller classes of vessels may have reached port, and that the fact passed unnoted, but of the forty old larger vessels which never returned the probability is that those whose fate is unknown perished at

CUPID'S ARTFUL ATTORNEY.

Dainty Story From the German About The greatly honored Moses Mendelssohn who was called the Socrates of his time, was visiting the baths of Pyrmont. There he became acquainted with the merchant Gaugenheim of Hamburg, recites a translation from the German in Success. "Rabbi Moses," the merchant said to him one day, "we revere you, but my daughter especially reveres and admires you with the greatest enthusiasm. It would be the highest honor to me to have you for a son-in-law. Pray visit me some time." Moses Mendelssohn was very retiring and shy, for he was sadly hunchbacked. At length he set out for the journey. Ho went to Hamburg and sought out Gaugenheim in his counting house. The mer-chant said to him: "Go up and see my daughter. She will be delighted to see Mendelssohn made the visit to the daughter. On another day Mendelssohn came to Gaugenheim's counting house. He spoke of the agreeable and intellectual character of the daughter. "Yes, revered rabbi," said Gaugenheim.

"Should I speak frankly to you?"

Gaugenheim bowed assent.

"Certainly."

"You are a philosopher, benevolent and wise. You will not take it in bad part from the child. She was shocked when she saw you, because you'-"Because I have a frightful hump.

"I thought so," said Mendelssohn, "but ret I will call and take leave of your He went up into the dwelling apartments and scated himself by the daughter, who was sitting near the window in a raised seat, with a piece of needlework in her hand. They talked together pleasantly and intimately, but the maiden did not look up, and Mendelssohn did not look at her. At length the maiden put the question, "Do you really believe matches are decided in heaven?"

"Certainly. And something very unusual happens in my case. You know that according to a Talmudic saying at the birth of a child it is announced in heaven -this and this one will have this and this one. Now, when I was born, my wife was called out to me, but it was also declared that she would, alas! have a fearful hump.
'Dear God,' I said, 'a maiden who is deformed will very likely be bitter and harsh, A maiden ought to be beautiful. Dear God, give me the hump and let the maid en be beautiful and comely.' "

Scarcely had he said this when she fell upon his neck. She became his wife, and they were happy together. They also had beautiful and brave children.—Exchange.

School That Began at Noon. "The Three R's at Circle City" is the subject of a paper by Miss Anna Fulcomer in The Century. The author says:
During the short winter days it would in an appearance. When I arrived at 9 o'clock, it would either be dark or brilliant moonlight. Smoke might be seen lazily rising from four or five cabins out of the 400 or 500. I would light one lamp and wait. By 10 o'clock a few children would straggle sleepily in just as the day began to dawn. By 11 o'clock, shortly after sunrise, the majority of the children were at school, some coming without their breakfasts. By half past 12 all who were coming that day would have appeared. It was hard to get up before daylight on those cold, dark mornings. I often used to wish that I was one of the little girls, so that I, too, might sleep until daylight. No one in camp pretended to get up early unless there was some special work on hand which must be done. As I was going home to my lunch at noon friends would sometimes call out to me: "Good morning! Come in and have some breakfast. We have fine moose steak and hot cakes." On Saturdays and Sundays I lived and slept as did other people. Even when one did not sit up later at night than 10 or half past it required an effort to rise before daylight. There is some thing in the air and in the manner of life lengthened the children came earlier to

A Preference.

Once in a great while Mr. Blynkins develops an impression that he is wiser than his wife. This state of mind is only occasional, owing to the completeness of demonstrations to the contrary which almost invariably follow it. The baby had been crying. All her efforts to soothe it had been vain, and finally Mr. Blynkins laid down the book whose reading he had interrupted two or three times a page to cast blame ful glances and said: "You are not adopting the method like-liest to quiet the child. You have been humming to it, but what the child needs is music. Give him to me and I'll show you what I mean."

He took the child and proceeded to chant lullaby. The little one stopped crying and

"There!" said Mr. Blynkins as he reached the end of a verse. "What he wanted was music, real music. Of course the fact that I used to sing in a glee club and had my voice cultivated may make a

He had not got very far into the next stanza when there came a ring at the bell. He gave the baby to his wife while he opened the door. A girl of 14 or 15 said: "We're the people who have just moved into the flat above. There's a sick lady with us and says if it's all the same to you, would you mind letting the baby cry instead of singing to it."—Washington

Month Character.

Every mouth has a character of its own. More can be told by the lips, even when silent, than by any other feature, with the possible exception of the eye. Did you ever see a man with a small mouth amount to anything? No. Did you ever seen a man with a broad mouth who was not a genius? No. Did you ever see a man with arched lips, drawn far down at the corners, who was not either a cry baby or a flend? No. Did you ever see a man with a straight mouth and thin lips who did not cling to a purpose until it was accomplished? No. Did you ever see a man with lips turned inside out who was not an enthusiast? No. Thick lipped men are generally impulsive. Thin lips indicate secretiveness. A long upper lip means "get there." RISKED HIS LIFE.

American Marksmanship Shown In a Story In Collier's Weekly are some anecdotes of the late president of Venezuela. One runs: Another little incident that occurred during the winter of 1896 showed Crespo's thirst for notoriety and theatrical display. Shortly after the episode with Great Britain there came to Caracas a traveling American variety company. Among the performers was a young woman who did marvelous fancy shooting with a rifle. The news of the fair American's prowess soon reached the ears of the president, who invited her to give a private exhibition at not slow in accepting, and they reached the executive mansion one bright Sunday morning. After the usual stock variety performance a number of glass balls were smashed with the rifle in every imaginable position. Crespo was amazed, and, turning to the young woman, said, "Do you think you could hit one of those balls if I placed it on the top of my head?" "I should estern it the honor of my life, Senor Presidente," she gallantly re-Mrs. Crespo and the entire cabinet were

A BLACK EYE.

The Proper Way to Treat This Unsightly and Unwelcome Disfigurement.

A black eye is simply a bruise, a black and blue spot, of the cyclids and the parts underneath the orbit. All these tissues being very loose and spongelike in texture, the blood which escapes beneath the skin in all cases of bruising and constitutes the black and blue mark spreads very widely and causes great disfigurement. Sometimes, if the injury has been seneath the membrane covering the eveball. but the eyeball itself usually escapes serious damage owing to its elasticity and to the efficient protection afforded by the bony ring forming the edges of the orbit. A short time after the injury has been received swelling of the part sets in, the skin is reddened and hot, and there is a feeling of tension, if not more or less actual pain. This is the time to treat the bruise in order to prevent as far as possible the formation of the "black eye."

If nothing is done, the discoloration soon appears, first of a dark reddish pur-ple color, and then almost black; later it fades off with a play of colors, green, blue and yellow, until gradually all traces of the accident disappear. The first thing to do, and that as soon as possible, is to apply cooling lotions to the part. A good way to do this is to keep two small handkerchiefs in a bowl of ice water and apply them alternately, squeezed dry and folded four ply. As soon as one handkerchief grows warm, it should be replaced by the other. By the end of the first day the cold applications will have done all the good they can, and then handkerchiefs wrung out of very hot water, in which borax or boric acid has been dissolved, should be applied and changed every minute or two. At the same time the discolored part may be stroked gently with the finger for 10 or 15 minutes at a time every two or three hours. This is a tedious process, but it will shorten the sufferer's period of em-barrassment by three or four days if per-

A feature of the modern gun will doubtless be its accuracy of aim, says Professor Ira N. Hollis in The Atlantic. The guns of the first monitor had the ordinary sights, and the men had to look out through the portholes of a revolving turret to find the enemy. We might say they often fired "on the wing" with very indefinite notions of the range and the brief-est instant for training the guns. The Iowa's turrets have small boxes projecting above the covers for lookouts. Horizontal slits are cut near the tops of these boxes, giving a view around the horizon.

The guns themselves are aimed by means of cross hairs in telescopes and fired by electric buttons which are instantaneous in their action. Once the cross hair is on the object, the projectile may be sent on its way at a velocity of 2,000 feet a second before the roll of the ship has time to impair its accuracy. The range is found by means of instruments set up as far apart as possible, which make the ship the base line of a triangle having the target for its apex. In case of failure of the instruments the range may be found by trial of the rapid fire guns, which deliver from 6 to 20 shots a minute.

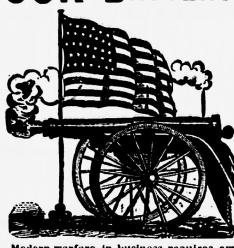

English Women's Shoes. It is funny about English women's shoes. They never have anything but sensible flat heels for walking, but when it comes to a dancing slipper no French heel is too high for them. But they keep a great variety of footgrar and are prepared for any occasion. Thus Lady Ermyntrude Russell, when she married Sir Edward Malet, included no less than 1,000 pairs of boots, shoes and slippers in her trousseau. This was an unusual supply, however. It created no end of amusement and scandal, according to the point of view, and it was accorded prominence in a biography of the embassador which appeared in one of the London society papers about that time.— San Francisco Argonaut.
