OLD TIME SURGERY.

The Barbarous Methods That Were Employed In the Sixteenth Century. Ambroise Pare, a barber surgeon of the sixteenth century, tells in his notes how in 1537 he went to the long wars to get practice in surgery. He invented some new processes, particularly in the treatment of amoutated limbs. Up to Pare's time the most barbarous means had been used to stop the bleeding. In his own words: "So soon as the limb was removed the surgeons would use many cauteries to stop the flow of blood, a thing very horrible and cruel in the mere telling. And truly of six thus cruelly treated scarce two ever escaped, and even these were long ill and the wounds thus burned were slow to heal, because the burning caused such vehement pains that they fell into fever, convulsions and other mortal accidents. In most of them, moreover, when the scar fell off there came fresh bleeding, which must again be stanched with the cauteries. So that for many healing was impossible, and they had an ulcer to the end of their lives, which prevented them from having an artificial limb." The idea of abolishing such cruelty by using the ligature occurred to Pare in one of his war journeys, and his success went beyond his own expectations. His other discovery was made within a few hours of his joining the army. It was believed by the surgeons of the day that there was poison in a gunshot wound, and one of the accepted authorities insisted that they must be cauterized "with oil of elders scalding hot, mixed with a little treacle." The pain was intolerable. It happened that at his first treatment of gunshot wounds Pare's oil ran short, and he used instead "a digestive made of the yolks of eggs, oil of roses and turpentine." To his surprise, he found next morning that the patients he had thus treated were in bet ter condition than the others. "Then I resolved never more to burn thus cruelly poor men with gunshot wounds."

LINCOLN'S JOKE.

How He Fixed the Responsibility For the Loss of Harper's Ferry. President Lincoln's jokes, especially when perpetrated in connection with grave matters, usually had a purpose in them. After Lee had taken Harper's Ferry the president, realizing how great a calamity t was to the northern arms, determined if possible to fix the responsibility for the loss of the important position. Halleck was summoned, but did not know where the blame lay. "Very well," sald Lincoln, "I'll ask General Schenck." The latter could throw no light upon the question, further than to say that he was not to blame. Milroy was the next to be called to the presence of the commander in chief and to enter a plea of "not guilty." Hooker was next given a hearing, and Fighting Joe made a very emphatic disclaimer of all responsibility. Then the president assembled the four generals in his room and said to them: 'Gentlemen, Harper's Ferry was surrendered and none of you, it seems, is responsible. I am very anxious to discover the man who is." After striding across the room several times the president suddenly threw up his bowed head and exclaimed: "I have it! I know who is re-"Wno, Mr. President; who is it?" asked the distinguished quartet as they looked anxious, if not troubled. "Gentlemen." said the president, with a meaning twinkle in his eye, "General Lee is the man." ere was a lack of mirth in the laugh created, and the four generals took their departure with a determination that they would not again be placed under suspi cion.—Detroit Free Press.

Othello Wants to "Punch" Somebody. Seymour was locally known as "Chouse." because on one occasion when playing Othello at the Limerick theater he in the well known passage: "Excellent wretch, perdition eatch my soul, but I do love thee, and when I love thee not chaos is come again," pronounced the word 'chaos" as if written "chouse."

Ever after whenever he was announced to play the saying among playgoers was, "Chouse is come again." Seymour hated the nickname, and it is recorded of him that one night when he was playing Othel lo in the "dying scene" a voice from the house roared out, "That's d——d good, Then the audience witnessed a singular spectacle. Othello sat bolt upright, shook his fist in the direction of the disturber and in a voice of rage invited him, if he were a man, to come down and have his head "punched." There being no answer to this challenge, the hapless "Moor" solemnly turned over and proceeded to "die," to an obligate of titters from the entire nouse.—Pall Mall Gazette.

The Guillotine.

Recent improvements have made the guillotine a much smaller and more delicate instrument than it used to be. The two parallel uprights down which the knife slides are a third shorter than they were formerly and are no longer painted bright scarlet, but a dirty vandyck brown. The knife, which is usually represented in the illustrated papers as a great, triangular piece of steel, has now almost a razorlike shape and is weighted with mercury let into a reservoir at the top of the blade (the ax of the German executioner is similar weighted) and no longer with lead .- Paris

School Physicians.

Some of the primary schools in Germany have their own physician. He watches over the classrooms and is there to show that questions of warming, ventilation, lighting and cleaning have entered into the kingdom of science whereof he is king. Once in every fortnight he is to give instruction in every class in the school, and the text he preaches from is "Sanitas sanitatum, omnia sanitas." In short, he is the health officer of the whole establishment, the priest of hygeia and the philosopher and friend of the teacher and the taught. The experiment was first made at Wiesbaden and has been pronounced a Badly Joined. Mr. Russell, in his "Collections and Recollections," tells this story of an inappropriate quotation: The leading citizen a seaside town erected some iron benches on the sea front and, with a view to combine the commemoration of his own beneficence with the giving a profitable turn to the thoughts of the public, inscribed on the backs: "These seats were presented to the town of Shingleton by Joseph Buggins, Esquire, J. Sandy's Dreadfully Sudden Demise. It still happens occasionally that the price of some particular stock or share depends largely on one life. It often hap-pens, too, that the sudden death of an operator who is a large holder or a large bull of any stock will cause a sharp fall in its price, because the knowledge that this stock will have to be sold makes the dealers sell bears in anticipation. It is related that a certain Scot, on hearing of the sudden death of an old Glasgow friend who was notoriously very deep in North British railway stock, first rushed to the railway market and sold 10,000 "British" in preparation for the fall that was sure to follow when his dead friend's account was liquidated, and then took a telegram form and wired to the widow, "Am terribly vexed to hear of poor Sandy's dreadfully sudden

A WICKED MAN.

How He Planned to Turn the Tables on His Unsuspecting Wife. He looked at his watch, debated with himself for a minute and then said, "Go on with the game. I'll sit in a little lop-

"Likely to be somebody sitting up for "Sure to be," was the reply.
"Possibility that the party who is sitting up will be mad clear through?" inquired the player opposite.

"Not only a possibility, but a certainty," answered the man who had looked at his watch, "and I don't mind saying that if it was any other night I wouldn't dare you?" asked the dealer.

What is there peculiar about tonight?" asked the dealer. "The fact that I received this today," replied the player as he took an envelope from his pocket and held it up. "Letter?" they asked.

"No; bill," he answered. "Milliner's "I don't see" -- began one of the others "Why, it's simple enough," returned the man with the bill. "Can't you always find something to kick about in a mil liner's bill?" They admitted that they usually could "Well," he went on, "there's an item for a hat here that's all right. She told me she was going to get it and what it would cost, but there's another item of $4.35 for ribbons and things that would give me a chance to make my roar. I'll turn loose the minute I get in the housebefore she has a chance to say a word."

"Well?" they said. "Well," he answered, "that will put her on the defensive at the start, and then I'll keep it up until a curtain lecture or any kind of a sarcastic reference to the club is about as far from her thoughts as we are LIME KILNS, WILKIN'S AVE. from the Philippines. IT BROKE AN ENGAGEMENT.

That Old Problem About a Picket Fence Over a Hill. whom I know. The aim was true, and

Dan Cupid sallied out once upon a day and aimed an arrow at a youth and a maid presently the maid was wearing a solitaire diamond on the third finger of her left hand, star of promise of a plainer ring which was to gleam there by and by. Everything went well till one day the youth received a letter from a third cousin of his out in Denver, a simple, innocent letter. with a postscript.
"P. S.," it read. "Will it take more pickets to build a fence over a hill or right straight through the hill, the pickets in both cases to be the same distance apart and to be set perpendicular to a horizontal line drawn through the base of the hill?" Of course the youth rend the letter to the maid, and she said right off: "Why, what an awfully silly question! Of course it would take more to go over

And the youth said: "No, it would take precisely the same number. ' Then she fell back on Euclid and the two sides of a triangle, with certain calculations, in which reference was made to "Pi R square," and he pinned his faith to a simple diagram with the banisters of the front stairs and in the hall as an object lesson to clinch his argument. They couldn't agree, and they parted in cold ness, meeting later only to part in anger. He says she is obstinate, and she, I regret to say, calls him pigheaded. The solitaire is gone and happiness with it, and after all that she thinks it will take more pickets to build the fence over the hill. and he is sure it won't. What do you think?-Washington Post.

MORSE SUSTAINED. One of His Theories Regarding Copper Wire Emphasized by Time. "The telegraph has got back to where it started as a science and revolutionized the world," explained a prominent telegraph line constructor, "in the matter of copper wire. In all of the experiments made by Professor Morse, the inventor, as well as those by Professor Henry, who so ably seconded him in developing the science, copper wire was used. The day following the sending of the original message between this city and Baltimore, 'What God hath wrought,' the wires broke down, and for some weeks there was no communication, in an electrical way at least. Contraction and expansion had not been provided for. and as a result down fell the wires. "All kinds of excuses were made and all kinds of methods were used to keep the wires in working order, but they were not gratifyingly successful. The result of the investigations then made was that iron wire was the most reliable, taking all the circumstances and conditions of temperature into consideration, and iron wire supplanted the copper wire, notwithstanding the protest of Morse. One of the greatest difficulties in the use of iron wire was the rapidity with which it was cut by rusting. In 15 years or so this was remedied by the process of galvanizing the vire, which gave it twice or three times its life by preserving the wire from oxida-

"When the telephone came into extensive use, even more difficulty was experienced with iron wire. Of course every one knew iron wire was not as good a conductor as copper, but those who had studied the matter also knew that copper wire would more easily break in consequence of the contractions produced by the changes in temperature. The only thing remaining to be done was to make a copper wire which would not be so sensitive to the weather. This was done in time, and today all the trunk lines for telephones are copper, without which long distance telephoning would be impracticable, as iron wires could not be used for any extended distances."—Washington Star.

Sarah Bernhardt's Annual Ad. Glancing through our Parisian contem poraries we are reminded that the dog days are approaching, and although we have not yet heard of the arrival of the sea serpent several hardy annuals have already made their appearance. One of these is the customary story referring to the approaching visit of Mme. Sarah Bernhardt to Germany. The divine Sarah, we may note by the way, recently left Paris for an extended tour. Soon there were rumors that she had signed an engagement for Germany. Then they became definite, and just as certain boulevard contemporaries had settled all the details and further how, when and where she was to be presented to the kaiser, there comes a note from Mme Bernhardt herself which settles the matter once and for all. It is in the great tragedienne's best style: "I learn I am going to Germany. I learn the emperor is interesting himself in my performances. I learn," etc. "Now learn by me that I am not going to Germany, and that I shall never on any occasion have the honor to be presented to his majesty, the king of Prussia." That, at all events, should settle this hardy annual. It is about time, for did one not know the artistic temperament of Mme. Bernhardt, its continual recurrence would savor of the reclame. But still "never" is a big word and opens up to a wide train of thought and probabilities.-

Paris Messenger. A Gladstone Anecdote. The following story of Mr. Gladstone is told by the Sunderland correspondent of the Leeds Mercury: "Years ago I was in Hawarden, and in talking to an old man who said he was older than Mr. Gladstone by a year or two he told me he knew Mr. Gladstone since a few days after he was married. This old man in his younger days used to carry pig iron from a ship or boat to a foundry some miles distant. He had a hill to go up, and he had to put his shoulder to the wheel. One day Mr. Gladstone was going up the hill, and he, too, put his shoulder to the wheel until he got to the top. The man rested his horse at the top of the hill, and an old man

SMOKING IN EUROPE.

American Devotees of the Weed Have a Hard Time of It. The smoking American has a hard time of it on the continent. In several of the tountries, notably in France, Spain and Italy, the trade is in the hands of the government, or so enormously taxed that it is virtually a government monopoly. Whatever may be the benefits to the national exchequer, there are certainly none to the ronsumer, and if a nationalist or state sorialist wants arguments to support his theories let him shun the subject of European tobacco. Pipe smokers will find no plug tobacco broad. They can get American brands of long cut or fine cut only at exorbitant prices. Where the monopoly prevails the common smoking tobacco offered for sale will cure the habit if anything will. Italhan cigars are about the meanest cigars man ever perpetrated on a suffering community. French eigars are not much better. Havanas can be bought in the Latin countries at high rates. The Germanic races come nearer understanding what is good in the tobacco line. Cigars are cheap in Switzerland, cheaper in Germany and dog cheap in Holland. In fact, Holland is the paradise of smokers. Tobacco is absolutely free of duty there, if I understand right, and partly by reason of the fact that Sumatra is a Dutch possession. Holland leads the world in some branches of the tobacco trade. So the discreet smoker will bring home from Holland as many cigars as he can. In Rotterdam or Amsterdam he may buy for 2 cents apiece eigars that in many American eigar stores would retail at 10 cents straight, and for 5 cents he can get luxury that in America a millionaire would deem extravagance.

The eigarette habit prevails in France, Italy and Spain, so decent cigarettes can be bought, but Turkish or Egyptian cigarettes are not given away. In Germany and Austria pipe smoking is more common, and in Great Britain it would seem as if most men smoked a pipe, both indoors and out.-Robert Luce in "Going Abroad.'

HORSES IN BATTLE.

Without Their Riders. When horses are hit in battle, they stop, tremble in every muscle and groan deeply while their eyes show wild astonishmen During the battle of Waterloo some of the horses, as they lay on the ground, having recovered from the first agony of their wounds, fell to eating the grass about them, thus surrounding themselves with a circle of bare ground, the limited extent of which showed their weakness. Others of these interesting animals were observed quietly grazing in the middle of the field between the two hostile lines, their riders having been shot off their backs, while the balls that flew over their heads and the tumult behind and before and around them caused no interruption to the usual instincts of their nature. It was also observed that when a charge of cavalry went past, near to any of the stray horses mentioned, they would set off, form themselves in the rear of their mounted companions, and, though without riders, gallop strenuously along with the rest, not stopping nor flinching when the fatal shock with the enemy took place. At the battle of the Kirb, in 1754, Major Macdonald, having unhorsed an English officer, took possession of his horse, which was very beautiful, and immediately DEPT., ASSOCIATED TRADE mounted it. When the English cavalry fled, the horse ran away with his captor, him, nor did the animal stop until it was at the head of the regiment of which, ap parently, its master was the commander. The melancholy and at the same time ludierous figure which Macdonald presented when he thus saw himself the victim of his ambition to possess a fine horse. which ultimately cost him his life upon the scaffold, may be easily conceived .-New York Tribune.

Modern Chivalry. Sir Walter Raleigh's cloak has been a symbol of chivalry for many years, but the little street boy's cap in the following story, from The Sunday Magazine, deserves an equally honorable place: The best story I know of an Edinburgh street boy was told me by a lady who witnessed the incident. There was a Christmas treat given to poor children at a mission hall, and hundreds of little ones were assembled at the doors in advance of the hour of admittance, many of them bare-

GEO. S. McCORMICK Among the number was a sweet faced little girl, who seemed less hardened than most to the cold, for she shivered in her poor jacket and danced from one foot to the other on the cold, hard stones. A boy not much older watched this performance for a few minutes and then, with a sudden impulse of protection, took off his cap, put it down before her and said: "Ye maun stand on that."

The Medieval Smith. The contemporaries of the mediaval smith were the artists who built the cathedrals, the masons, architects, sculptors and carpenters who put their religion into their work. His workmates were men of rectitude who reared these monuments of "chiseled music," which have so often been referred to as the pride and boast of the civilized world. We find the worthy smith was not one whit behind his con temporaries, for he also was an artist, and beautiful specimens of his handiwork remain to this day. He wrought the most graceful forgings by means of the fewest possible number of tools-forgings which showed his love of the beautiful and a painstaking desire to turn out work of great merit. The numerous exquisite examples of his handicraft which exist in our old gateways, church doors, altar railings, weathercocks on old buildings, sign boards of quaint wayside inns, still serve as types for continual imitation.—Good

He Was Scotch. A story of a Kilmarnock man's visit to London is told in The Herald of his town. He was most hospitably welcomed at the house of a friend's friend, on whom he had been asked to call. The lady of the house asked him if he were a total abstainer, and, finding he was not, brought out a lecanter of whisky and nearly filled umbler, which she handed to him. The Kilmarnock man protested that he could not take "half the amount." "Oh," replied the hostess, "you are Scotchman, aren't you?" Persistency. Persistency is characteristic of all mer who have accomplished anything great. They may lack in some particular, may have many weaknesses and eccentricities but the quality of persistence is never absent in a successful man. No matter what opposition he meets or what discouragements overtake him, he is always persist ent. Drudgery cannot disgust him, la-of purpose, that gives success.—Keystone Improved on Solomon In a Pontiac (Mich.) Sunday school little girl told the story of Solomon and the disputing mothers in this wise: "Solomon was a very wise man. One day two women went to him, quarreling about baby. One woman said, 'This is my child,' and the other woman said, 'No, 'tain't it's mine.' But Solomon spoke up and DAYTON, CLARKSVILLE AND said: 'No, no, ladies; don't quarrel. Give me my sword, and I'll make twins of him, me my sword, and I'll make twins of him,

so you can both have one." "-Exchange.
