ELECTRICITY FROM WIND.

Reasons Why This Method of Getting It is Not More Generally Adopted. If we mistake not, Dr. Fridtjof Nansen, n his last attempt to reach the north pole, had the Fram equipped with a specially designed windmill, which when operating ied by derangements of the drove a dynamo and furnished the neces-Stomach Liver and Bowels.

The Secret of Health.

Sary current for lighting purposes. An aermotor erected on the roof of a building in Park place in this city has been for some time successfully driving a dynamo for incandescent lighting. From this it will be seen that there is nothing very new in the application of windmills to the

> There are probably several reasons why the windmill or aermotor has not been more universally adopted for the above purpose. In the first place such a motive power is always more or less uncertain and cannot always be depended upon. There may be a calm just at the time it is found necessary to recharge the batteries, or the batteries may be in use when a breeze springs up. This would necessitate having two sets of batteries at a considerable cost. Another reason why aermotors have not been more extensively adopted is probably due to the fact that current can now be generated with steam as a motive power very economically, especially in large quantities. The erecting of an nermotor and the installation of a number of storage batteries with a dynamo mean a considerable outlay of money, especially when the cost of maintenance and renewals is taken into account. In certain cases it may be found that the Interest on the batteries, generator and windmill, with the labor item figured in, will cost as much in the long run as the current could be purchased for on the outside.

But probably the chief reason why the power of the wind is allowed to go to waste when it could be employed for generating electricity is the same as that which prevents the immense power derivable from the tides in both the Hudson and East rivers from being utilizednamely, conservatism, or, if not lack of progress, a slowness in availing ourselves of opportunities.—Electricity.

SENSIBLE SMOKING RULES.

Read Them, Ye Burners of the Cigarette, and Take Warning. Generalarzt Dr. Scholer publishes in the Centralblatt zu Gesundheitspflegen collection of "Hints to Smokers," which are founded, as the doctor states, upon his professional observations for many years of mouth, teeth, stomach, lungs, heart and skin of the devotees of tobacco. The first and foremost rule is never to smoke before breakfast, nor, as a rule, when the stomach is empty. This custom is the worst possible foe of digestion. Never smoke during any exertion of great physical energy, as dancing, running, cycling, mountain climbing or rowing, and especially if in a contest. Never follow "the bad custom of the French and the Russians" by allowing the smoke to pass through the nose. Never inhale it through

Keep the smoke as far as possible from the eyes and nose. The longer the pipe the better. The use of a short pipe during work is to be avoided. A pipe is the most wholesome form of smoking, a cigar the next, a cigarette the worst. Always throw away your cigar when you have smoked four-fifths of it. The last end of it is the most hurtful, in cauda venenum, the pol-on lurks in the tail. All eigarettes are bad, but eastern eigarettes the worst, for they are always compounded with some degree of opium. Th moker ought to rinse out his mouth, not only before every meal and before going to bed, but several times during the day. The best rinse for the smoker is a glass of water in which a tenspoonful of table salt has been dissolved. It should be used as a gargle at night, and care should be taken that every cavity in the teeth is well washed with it. The pipe's proper place is in the hand and only occasionally in the lips or the mouth.

When Marriage Is the Topic. The wedded state is a favorite subject with the epigram makers. From a very eld ballad we take this:

There was a criminal in a cars A-goin to be hanged; Respite to him was granted, And cart and crowd did stand To know if he would marry a wife Or rather choose to dia. "Tother's the worst-drive on

The criminal did reply More modern is this versex I would advise a man to pause In fact, I see no earthly cause He should not pause for life.

cart!"

Who, by the way, is the author who decribes a second marriage as being "the triumph of hope over experience?" Samuel Lover's matrimonial epigram in very apposite: Though matches are all made in heaven, they say. Yet Hymen, who mischief oft hatches, Sometimes deals with the house t'other side of the way, And there they make Lucifer matches. -Chambers' Journal.

Such In War. The actions of men wounded in battle are often misunderstood. General Fuller. as quoted in the Chicago Inter Ocean cites a pathetic instance of this kind: In the midst of battle General Fuller was trying to check the flight of panic stricken men. One poor fellow came stumbling along, not heeding a word that Indignant and impatient, Fuller, as he came near this man, leaned from his horse, and, touching him with his sword, said sharply, "Go back, sir!" The man looked up with an expression of anguish and despair on his face that said as plainly as words, "I am looking for a place to die." He opened his blouse and showed a big, gaping wound in his breast. Then he dropped to the ground. The general instantly dismounted, but almost as he raised the man's head to his arm the poor fellow breathed his last.

Breathing and Malaria. The importance of guarding against aerial transmission of malaria is shown by the personal observations of Dr. Mau-

rel. In Africa he had spent nights tramping in the marshes without suffering the least inconvenience, while his assistants suffered from chills, merely because they did not seem to be able, literally speaking, to keep their mouths shut. He absolutely refrained from talking, so as to allow none of the miasmatic air to reach his lungs through the mouth, the nasal passages, as is well known, acting as a sterilizing ap-paratus through the destructive action of the nasal secretions upon atmospheric organisms.-Exchange.

PRUNE JUICE IN WHISKY.

It Makes New Liquor Taste as If It Had Been Mellowed by Age, If one looks over the advertisements in the newspapers devoted to the interests of the liquor trade, his curlosity is likely to be aroused by seeing many advertisements of prune juice for sale. As prune juice is not among the things which the barroom offers to its patrons, the person of inquiring mind is naturally led to wonder why it is advertised and what part it plays in the preparation of alcoholic beverages. An explanation of the uses of prune juice was recently printed in The Liquor Trades

Journal. It says: "The object of using prune juice in blending whiskies is to remove the unpleasant smell which is characteristic of new liquors, to take off what may be termed the rough edge and to produce by artificial means the ripe, mellow flavor which otherwise comes only with age. It is an undeniable fact that a good prune juice will transform a rough, new whisky into a smooth, palatable liquor, while it would puzzle even an expert to decide that its mellowness had not been acquired

"Naturally any material which produces such results is a valuable aid to blenders, and consequently there is a vast quantity of it used annually, though there are many who prefer to use malaga, sherry, peach extracts or some other compound, but one feels safe in saying that the users of prune juice are in a majority.

"There are several New York firms engaged in the manufacture of prune juice, while others import it from Europe. The basis of all the better brands of prune juice is a light fermented wine, to which are added certain proportions of sugar sirup and prune extract, with sufficient high proof spirit to bring the mixture up to the desired alcoholic strength and color ing matter to give it the proper shade. Some manufacturers also uso certain chemicals, regarding the properties and effects of which they maintain a profound secrecy, each claiming for the article which they produce a superiority over al

"However, the object of all is the sam -viz, to supply a blending wine which will, with the least possible reduction in the proof, give to new whiskies the bouquet of aged goods."
