A Negro Assaults Sheriff Pickett.

Sheriff Charles D. Pickett, of this county, had a desperate encounter Saturday night while trying to arrest William Collins, colored, who was indicted at the March term of the Howard County Circuit Court, charged with attempting to murder another negro. Collins had evaded arrest since his indictment, but Sheriff Pickett received information Saturday that the fugitive was hiding in the vicinity of Dayton, in this county. The Sheriff, accompanied by Warden Walter S. Hinmon, of the Howard county jail, went to the house of a colored family, where they found Collins.

When the officers entered Collins ran upstairs, followed by the Sheriff. Just as Sheriff Pickett landed on the floor he was struck a terrific blow on the head with a heavy stone pitcher, which rendered him helpless. The negro then rushed downstairs. He was immediately seized by Warden Hinmon, but the powerful negro succeeded in making his escape. Several shots were fired at the negro by Warden Hinmon, but it is thought that none of them took effect. Collins is considered a desperate character, and has served time in the House of Correction for various crimes.

Once when arrested in Ellicott City Collins attempted to jump out of an upper story window, and four or five officers were required to hold him. He is a giant in strength. He is six feet high and weighs two hundred pounds. At another time he tried the same jumping feat to evade arrest, but landing on the rotten covering of an old potato hole, was carried through to the bottom and couldn't get out.

"Mystic Midgets."

The children of the Ellicott City schools will render at the Assembly Rooms on May 19 and 20, a cantata entitled the "Mystic Midgets," or "The Lilliputian Carnival of Nations." The proceeds are to establish a public school library. The scene of the cantata is laid in fairyland, and a pretty story is developed in two acts. The entire cast, aggregating about sixty, will be dressed in rich and appropiate costumes; the staging will be unusually attractive, the cantata opening on the "Isle of Flowers," where a fantastic fairy garden is seen, with a profusion of tropical flowers, butterflies, etc. Following this is a coral cave, glittering with gems; a gigantic rose opens to full bloom in view of the audience, and a silver swan boat is seen in full sail. The entire entertainment is given under the changing colors of the calcium light. The midgets include personations of all the nations of prominence, including "Not-worth-a-cent," the Indian, and Hop Sing, the Chinaman. Sambo and Quimbo, the two little coons, will sing a duet. Hop Sing will render a solo, "Washee Washee's Toast," tiny butterfly guards of seven years will be on hand to render a chorus and execute a "butterfly march," and there will be a grand chorus of sixty voices. Other interesting characters are Stinger, king of the insects, with his hornets, wasps, beetles, grasshoppers, etc.; and Titania, queen of the fairies, with her Amazon archer guards. On both nights of the performance a stage manager from New York will be present to handle special scenery.

Local and Miscellaneous.

Our correspondent, Mr. F. B. Livesey, of Sykesville, has been making some good suggestions of late. Whatever may be said of him he is a true newspaper man, feeding with meat all those who are able to take meat. His article in our issue of April 22d last, on the dog nuisance, should have attracted the attention of all right thinking men. There is nothing more terrible than a rabid beast carrying suffering and death in his teeth biting every living thing in the track of his mad run. All people know this yet there seems to be lacking a concerted movement for the suppression of the nuisance or even a mitagation of it.

MAD DOG EXCITEMENT.

The Mad Animal Running Amuck Snapped at Everything in its Way.

A dog said to have belonged to Mr. J. S. Moxley, who lives near Alberton, Howard county, suddenly went mad Saturday and about 5 o'clock in the morning starting on a run toward this city.

Frothing at the mouth and yelping, the dog traveled twelve miles from his starting point until he reached the thickly settled part of Frederick avenue, below Carroll Station, biting a number of horses, cows and other animals on his way. The dog was killed by Mr. Clarence Oldfield, of Ellicott City, who broke his neck with a railroad switch iron. Mr. Timothy Casey, of Carroll, assisted in dispatching the rabid animal by emptying a revolver into him. Mr. Oldfield in his fight with the brute was bitten in the hand and slightly lacerated about the throat. He went into the city and while there visited the Pasteur department of the City Hospital, returning to his home later in the day

The dog is described as a large hound, very thin and tall. He was first seen passing through Jonestown, about three miles above Ellicott City and a few miles below Alberton. He attacked a team of horses with which a son of Mr. Samuel R. Burgess, a Jonestown truck farmer, was plowing, and bit one of the horses in the nose, holding on until he was shaken off. Going through Jonestown he is said to have bitten several dogs and also a cow which belonged to a Mr. Harvey. At Ellicott City he attacked the horse of Mr. Rezin Jones, of Jonestown, who had driven into Ellicott City on business. The dog sprang straight at the horse's head, and hung for several minutes by his teeth to the lips and nostrils of the horse. Other animals bitten in Ellicott City were a cow belonging to Mr. Hamilton Oldfield, a valuable horse belonging to Miss Merrick, of Ellicott City, and a horse belonging to Mr. John Hardy, of Clarkesville, Howard county. Two dogs belonging to Mr. Thomas Kirby and Mr. Randolph Groves, of Ellicott City, were also bitten. Mr. Groves' dog took prizes at the recent Sportsman's exposition.

The mad dog passed through Catonsville without biting, but below North Bend teams belonging to Messrs. Adolph Stall, of Dorsey's lane; Capt. W. H. Baugher, of Ellicott City, and the firm of Scholsser & Steinacker were attacked, and a horse belonging to each was bitten.

Mr. Oldfield met the dog at Irvington, where he had borrowed a pistol from the drug store of Dr. J. D. Brown. The dog stopped near Irvington and laid down in the road. Mr. Oldfield advanced within a few feet and fired at the dog without effect. The dog sprang upon him and seized his hand and the pistol in his mouth. Twice the pistol was snapped in the dog's mouth, but it would not go off, and Mr. Oldfield's hand was bitten. He jumped into an electric car and the dog was followed down the road to Carroll Station, where the car was boarded by Mr. Casey, who was armed with a revolver. Just below the station the car got ahead of the dog and Mr. Oldfield and Mr. Casey got out and waited for him. Mr. Casey had opened fire on the dog while in the car and continued firing until the dog approached and sprang at Mr. Oldfield. The latter, who had armed himself with the switch iron, struck the dog across the shoulders with such force that he was felled to the ground, where between bullets from Mr. Casey's revolver and blows from Mr. Oldfield's switch iron the vicious animal was soon killed.

During his run from Catonsville a number of people had shot at the dog and chased him with pitchforks and other weapons. Most of the horses bitten by the dog were taken by their owners to veterinary surgeons, where their wounds, were cauterized. Mr. Rezin Jones, whose horse was badly bitten, it is stated, had it killed Saturday night. Other horses, whose owners could not be found, were also said to have been bitten.

There was another mad dog scare here Monday afternoon but the promptness in dispatching the animal saved a general alarm. The animal rushed down Main Street and ran into the stable of the Howard House, where it was prevented from proceeding on its journey until Police Officer Bradley Scaggs arrived on the scene and ended its existence with his pistol.

A Sad Event.

All around remember the bright, beautiful wedding of Mr. Oliver Pearre, of Frederick, and Miss Lulie Dorsey on June 11th, 1895, and the sad events since—the birth of the little daughter at Oakland, her death in Frederick, and Mr. Pearre's death in November, 1897, the frail, delicate little widow left to waste away like her husband and child, of consumption. Only a short year, then she went to be with her loved ones in Heaven. Miss Louisa V. Warfield received the little bride with loving words. She stood with her great-great niece in her arms the day she was born, also by the death bed of Mr. and Mrs. Pearre. And today, the 20th of April, 1899, just at sunset the family stood around the open gave as Mr. Basil Bowman, of Poplar Springs, arrived with the remains of little Ollivera Pearre from Mt. Olivet, in Frederick. The children were there with flowers to put on "cousin Lulie's baby." By the little aunt of ten, Elizabeth Dorsey, stood Helen Stinson, the flower girl, the grandfather and grandmother, and other loving relations and as the setting sun shone on the three flower covered graves I thought truth is stranger than fiction. Three short lives of sunshine and shadow, and they sleep in Jesus. But the bond is broken. In the Oakland home the voices of the loved are still. Their places are empty and vacant and never can be filled. BY A FRIEND.

The B. & O. May Change its Route.

A Frederick dispatch says: A corps of Baltimore and Ohio civil engineers Wednesday began work on a new survey which it is thought will lead to running the main line of the B. & O. road nearby or through the suburbs of Frederick by changing its present course from Mt. Airy westward. The object of the new survey is to find a new route for the railroad, so as to avoid the heavy grades at Mt. Airy and Monrovia. The proposed route is said to be through the Linganore region on toward Frederick, skirting it on the suburbs. The company, it is said, had contemplated tunneling the mountain at Mt. Airy on account of the heavy grade, but on account of the enormous expense it is said this project has been abandoned.

An Epidemic of Whooping Cough.

FLORENCE.

FLORENCE, April 29.—I would like to say in reply to Mr. Walter S. Black that every one knows him as a conscientious christian gentlemen and we believe a temperance advocate, and wish to assure every one that he is in error when he claims we made contrary statements; think he made a hasty personal application where none was intended. As for visits paid by young ladies to relatives of the highest standing "slurs" is a harsh term; call it annoyance. You can only "slur" at an improper thing or action. Also wish to say both young men are innocent of our misdoings. We wish most emphatically to offer our most sincere apologies for unintentional offences, and assurance of a firm purpose of amendment and shall be glad to receive a charitable forgiveness.

As for a correspondent we have in mind his own skirts should be kept clean. There is not a week that his "fine Italian hand" is not holding some one up to public gaze as an object of mirth, scorn or sarcastic ridicule. If he will strike in this manner he must expect his blows to be returned with interest. As we are about to depart for the Philipines, we wish to bid everyone a temporary farewell, hoping that Tim Trickett will continue his successful career as a politician and writer of comedies. R. I. P.

COOKSVILLE.

COOKSVILLE, May 2.—"Oh! what a rip." It reminds one of the fate of Ananias, who burst wide open.

Poor chap, he should leave us,
And journey toward the skies;
THERE he must practice truths,
But, HIC JACET,—HERE he lies.

A correspondent disclaims dislike to Tim Trickett. The likes or dislikes of sewer reporters do not concern him.

I have been to Glenwood. That attractive village began life as Matherse's (Mathews') store, and a few rides over its "new pike," will cause people to begin a new life in a better world. It is believed by many that the stones out of which the new roadway was constructed came from the region about Rover's dam, for they are so "cussed," angular and sharp. Each one seems wide awake and upright, and one can almost imagine that it is saying, "I'm not a pebble on the beach," or a tiny rhine stone in a ring, but a considerable section of what once was a huge boulder, and a Monument to Modern Progress, and I make loose spokes and dry bones to rattle.

Glenwood has been so modernized and changed since I was a frequent visitor in its neighborhood and passed many happy days there, that I can scarcely realize that the present pretty place was evolved from the hamlet of long ago. I don't wonder that its inhabitants are proud of it, and when its pike becomes softened by age and use I will go there again. When I think of the pangs caused by my three rides over its new causeway, and carefully rub the bruised portions of my anatomy with a pain killer I can say feelingly of Glenwood:

Thou hast wounded the body that loved thee,
And cherished thine image for years;
Thou has taught me at last to go round thee,
In secret, in silence and tears.

"Got any ahenges (oranges,) said a man. Tom asked me to get him three or four, but I don't know what he wants 'em fer." Possibly to use as base balls or little liver pills.

It is said that a former governor intends to pass the summer in a brown study, in his native county, that he may further the ambition of a relative to go to Annapolis as a State senator. Probably the ex-official thinks that his protege can blaze for him at least one tiny path leading toward the seat now occupied by the illegally elected Wellington. "All roads lead to Rome" but not to Washington.

"Lisbon will soon be a western suburb of Baltimore" said a gentleman. Better say an eastern suburb of "Leech's Corner," and yet it is a nice, quiet, pleasant little village where dwell Jane Foster, "the brightest jewel in her crown," and a distinguished Shakespearean scholar that can't "abide" "burdens." Well, Doctors will differ. Dr. Lacy takes up his burden of visiting and curing the sick, and carries it smilingly and successfully. "The letent poetical genius" of Howard has slumbered so long, that according to a possible competent authority, it is now afflicted with "obscurity of the rythm and metrical arrangement" whatever that may mean. I wonder if the technical name for the trouble is "acute laminitis." That attacks the feet. Are rythm, and metrical arrangement, synonymous with vermiform appendix?

I note some discussion as to which can be the more profitably wielded, the hoe or the pen. If the one that started it will try again, I will tell him which is better for him to "wield." I'm in a good deal of doubt now.

I feel sorry for some people that seem afraid to laugh or ever smile at a joke, as if 'twere sinful. They look as if they were sitting on tacks and dreading a possible sneeze, or other convulsion of nature, were afraid to move a muscle. How I would like to see them "tickled to death" just once.

A fire that broke out on Friday last on Mr. Crawford Hobbs' farm near Cooksville, got away with fifteen or twenty cords of wood, and caused neighbors to hustle to prevent its reaching other farms. Matters looked dangerous for a long time. COOKS WILL.

LAUREL.

There are now four saloons in Laurel. Last May, for the first time in many years, Laurel became a license town, and there have been six saloons since that time. One of them recently closed, and another closed on Monday. Strenuous efforts were made by anti-liquor partisans to keep some of the four applications from being approved, but in each case a majority of the bona fide residents within the limits set by the law signed the application, and Mayor Phelps approved them. The license fee is $500, and the cost of a license, including the internal revenue charge, and the traders' license, is $537.50. Of the license fee, $350 goes to the town, $100 to the county for use upon the public roads and $50 to the State. The revenue from the four saloons this year will be of much use to Laurel, and will go far, it is claimed, toward paying off the municipal debt.

An athletic association has been organized in Laurel by young men with temporary officers as follows: President, W. W. Billard; secretary, Norman R. Ellis; vice president, Roy Roseberry; treasurer, Ogle Marbury.

Some of the owners of fast horses in Laurel have organized and laid out a half mile track on the old Alsop place, just beyond Mistletoe Springs, and are getting it in shape. Messrs. Dallam, Tighe, G. E. Baldwin, Schooley and Dr. T. W. Byerly, with others, are managing the affair.

A number of new buildings are in course of erection in Laurel. C. W. Donaldson is pushing the work on the new store of Evans Duvall; T. H. O'Brien is at work upon the addition to the Catholic Church; Hugh Curley has nearly completed the carpenter work on the new store and dwelling for Mr. Steynen and G. W. Alcorn has nearly finished the foundation for his house.

The first steps toward constructing the proposed cycle path between Washington and Laurel were taken Saturday, when directors of the Washington Cycle Path Association rode over the line between Washington and Hyattsville, being accompanied by surveyors. A prelimininary line was estsblished following the line of the Washington and Baltimore turnpike.
