WHAT SENATOR JONES THINKS.

Senator Jones, of Ark., Chairman of the Democratic National Committee, has returned to Washington for the session of Congress. He has entirely recovered his health; says he never felt better, and that, like the Democratic party, he is full of fight. He believes, and with good reasons for his belief, that the Democratic party is today in better condition for the Presidential campaign than the Republican party is, and that its condition is more likely to improve between now and the opening of the campaign than is that of the Republican party; and he says further that his belief is fully shared by every man who attended the recent Democratic conference at Chicago. He looks confidently for Democratic assistance from the legislation of this Congress, Republican in both branches; the Shylocks of the last Presidential campaign are already demanding their pound of flesh, with no shrewd Portia in sight to show Mr. McKinley how to meet the demand in such a way that they will be made to follow the example of Shakespeare's Shylock. It looks now as though they would get the pound of flesh and with it the life of the Republican party.

JURIES AND UNANIMITY.

From the Baltimore News.

The Greensborough Free Press, commenting on the verdict in the case of Garey vs. the Commissioners of Caroline County, tried at the recent term of the Queen Anne Court, raises the old question concerning the requirement of unanimity for a jury verdict. Mr. T. Fred Garey, a farmer of Caroline, was returning from a fox-hunt when his horse fell through a bridge. The rider was injured in the fall, and brought suit against the County Commissioners for $50,000 damages, alleging that his injuries were of such a character as to permanently disable him. The case was removed to Queen Anne, and, when brought to trial, the defense set up was that the road upon which the plaintiff was traveling at the time he received his injuries was not a public road, and therefore the county was not responsible in damages. Voluminous testimony was taken, and it was proved, on behalf of the plaintiff, that work had been done on the bridge and the road in question at the expense of the county. On the other hand, strong proof was offered that the road had never been a public road, in the legal sense. The jury, after long deliberation, found for the plaintiff, and awarded damages of 1 cent. This placed the costs of the trial, which are heavy, upon the county.

The verdict of the jury has been diversely criticised by the Caroline taxpayers upon whom the Queen Anne jury has placed these costs. The Fee Press says there should have been no "half-way business" about the verdict. If Mr. Garey received his injuries on a public road, then he is entitled to all the damages he could prove to the satisfaction of the jury. If the road was not a county road, then he should have been compelled to bear the costs in the case. According to the reports of the trial, neither party to the litigation is satisfied, and a new trial is expected. The Free Press says:

Too often in cases of this kind it is not justice that one gets but a compromise in which either sympathy or expediency cut the greatest figure. We have known of suits against the county, or some great corporation, where jurors, in arriving at a verdict, say "the plaintiff is not entitled to anything, but he is not able to pay the costs and the defendant will not miss it, so we will split the difference." This is entirely wrong and we feel assured that in such cases that if the matter in dispute had been submitted to arbitrators where the costs, if any, would be small, that the decision, either for or against, would certainly not have such an appearance of compromise. The cause of this trouble, in the main, is the necessity under our laws for the entire jury to agree. The remedy is for our laws to be changed, so that in civil suits, when three-fourths of the jury agree, a verdict can be reached, whether three of the jury agree or not. Law courts are essentially the seats of justice, yet many an injustice is done, because one man is either obstinate or corrupt. The courts are one of the few, if not only instances, where unanimous agreement is required to decide a case. A constitutional amendment, which affects the lives and property of all of us, can be adopted without requiring the consent of all the people affected by it. Let our lawmakers see if it is not possible to do something with this knotty question.

The question raised by the Free Press—whose editor is a lawyer and a Delegate-elect to the General Assembly—is one of those standing questions upon which much is to be said on both sides, but which everybody is reluctant to discuss. The reason for this reluctance is of course the feeling that an institution so fundamental as the jury system, and with such a great as well as hoary antiquity behind it, is almost impregnable to attack in any important feature. But it is none the less interesting to have this very serious point discussed in an earnest manner, and our Greensborough contemporary does well to call attention to it.

Remarkable Rescue.

Mrs. Michael Curtain, Plainfield, Ill., makes the statement, that she caught cold, which settled on her lungs; she was treated for a month by her family physician, but grew worse. He told her she was a hopeless victim of consumption and that no medicine could cure her. Her druggist suggested Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption; she bought a bottle and to her delight found herself benefited from first dose. She continued its use and after taking six bottles, found herself sound and well; now does her own housework, and is as well as she ever was.—Free trial bottles of this Great Discovery at Dr. Isaac J. Martin's Sons' Drug Store. Only 50 cents and $1.00, every bottle guaranteed.

CATONSVILLE.

General John Gill is having an artesian well sunk at "Kenwood," his country home, near Catonsville, which will have sufficient capacity to supply his home and the other buildings on the place.

W. H. Gorman, Warfield Munroe and Stephen S. Van Lill, of Catonsville, requested the County Commissioners Tuesday to place gas lamps on Ivanhoe and Montrose avenues, at that place. The commissioners agreed to maintain the lamps, if the residents on the avenues would furnish them. The proposition was accepted.

My son has been troubled for years with chronic diarrhoea. Sometime ago I persuaded him to take some of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. After using two bottles of the 25-cent size he was cured. I give this testimonial, hoping some one similarly afflicted may read it and be benefited.—THOMAS C. BOWEN, Glencoe, O. For sale by Dr. I. J. Martin's Sons.

PRESENT DAY THOUGHTS.

"BY GROSVENOR."

Written for THE TIMES.

Washington's Moral Courage—In less than two weeks the centennial of the death of George Washington will have been commemorated in hundreds of communities throughout the land, but more notably in the District of Columbia and at Mount Vernon. Much doubtless will be said regarding him that would seem extravagant if we could come in personal contact with this plain, unassuming leader of the Revolution. But the extravagance of others need not deter us from adorning his memory with a few humble wreaths of appreciation.

Two phases of his character seem almost contradictory. Where public utterance was required, he was diffident—almost bashful. When he risked his estates and offered his sword in the service of his country, he said emphatically, "I this do declare with the utmost sincerity I do not think myself equal to the command that I am honored with." When he wrote his farewell message he deferred to the judgment of others as to what it should contain. He was quick to recognize his own limitations and to lean on others. But this distrust of self was not always his.

Two acts evince beyond all refutation the lion-like courage and self-poise of George Washington. With whom had there been eight years of war? England. From whom had there been twenty years and more of abuse and all wrong? England. What country had sent hireling soldiery to the highways and the cities of America? England. Yet when it came to the point of settling a policy that should exist—not between the mother country and her colonies, but—between one sovereign nation and another, Washington dared, in the face of ten thousand threats, to approve the commercial treaty that resulted from the envoyship of Chief Justice Jay. His character was attacked with violence. Even impeachment was suggested. Hounds of defamation tried to drag him down. There is but one straight course—said he—and that is to seek truth and pursue it steadily.

Again. What nation had given us of its blood and of its treasure that we might fight its own hated foe? France. She had done for us—often ineffectually—the best she could, and throughout the country there was a feeling of intense gratitude towards her; for she had given Lafayette, Rochambeau, and DeGrasse. Yet it was against France and with England that Washington dared to stand during his presidential occupancy. Even as there had been ten thousand threats against our treaty with England, there had been an equally intense feeling in favor of joining forces with France; but the anxious Washington, ever seeking for the good of his country—not the immediate good only, but the present and the future good—saw in the French Revolution and its leaders something very different from the American Revolution, and he would not give support to what under the name of Revolution was actually retrogression.

Without any others these two acts are and will never fail as signal proofs of the independence and farseeing character of his judgment.

PUBLICATIONS.

EMPIRE OF THE SOUTH.—What is unquestionably the most comprehensive and beautiful volume ever issued upon the South, has just been published by the Southern Railway. Its title, "The Empire of the South," conveys an impression of its general character, but nothing short of a thorough reading demonstrates how carefully the author, Mr. Frank Presbrey, has gone into every interest of this section, commercial, industrial, and educational. The book is a superbly illustrated octavo volume of nearly two hundred pages, and not only is the South and all of her vast interests treated in a general way, but each State is separately given full representation. The author had the co-operation of the officials of the Southern Railway in its preparation, and evidently the greatest pains have been taken to make a presentation which is thorough, correct, and at the same time exceedingly interesting.

The "Empire of the South," beside being a work of great value to those seeking reliable information concerning the south, is a splendid specimen of the typographic art. The print is faultless while the 500 illustrations which it contains are brought up to the best photographic distinctness. Everyone should have it as a book of reference. Anyone sending fifteen cents to Mr. J. C. Horton, Passenger Agent of the Southern Railway Co., 120 E. Baltimore St., Baltimore, will receive the work at once.

MCCLURE'S MAGAZINE FOR DECEMBER.—With its drawings by such artists as Howard Pyle, Frank Du Mond and C. K. Linson, and its reproductions of some of these in color, and its beautiful, seasonable special cover, McClure's Magazine for December is a very notable artistic achievement. But it is no less notable from the strictly literary standpoint. In the Introduction and Prologue of Dr. John Watson's ("Ian Maclaren's") "Life of the Master," there is a more than satisfactory opening of what promises to be a unique and valuable feature throughout the year. Dr. Watson frankly announces that he does not expect those who follow his work will be much the wiser regarding mere sites and dates, but he does let himself hope that they "will have a clearer vision of the August Figure who invites the judgment of each man's conscience, who lays His hand on each man's heart."

There are two Christmas stories—one of the South and tramp life; one of the West and railroad life—both original in incidents and genial in spirit and outcome.

WHY THE CONFEDERACY FAILED.—Joel Chandler Harris contributes to the Christmas number of The Saturday Evening Post an authentic account of the daring attempt to warn the Confederate cabinet of the great movement whereby Grant and Sherman were to cooperate in crushing the Confederacy. How the attempt failed and why it failed are the subjects of a chapter of the little-known history of the Secret Service. Mr. Harris has his facts first-hand, and he has woven them into a story of such absorbing interest that it might easily be mistaken for pure fiction. The Christmas number of the Post will be on all newsstands December 21.

REVIEW OF REVIEWS.—In the Review of Reviews for December Dr. Albert Shaw writes on "The School City—A Method of Pupil Self-Government." This is a system now in operation in many public schools throughout the country by which training is given in the practical duties of citizenship. Dr. Shaw sets forth the working principles on which the system is based and gives many interesting facts of actual experience in the schools which have developed these principles in practice. The article is illustrated.

"Guy V. Henry—A Knightly American," is the title of an appreciative character sketch, while the work of General Henry in Porto Rico is highly commended in an article contributed to the same magazine by Dr. H. K. Carroll, special commissioner to the island, on "What Has Been Done for Porto Rico Under Military Rule."

The "New Lippincott" Magazine for December.—The December "New Lippincott" breathes the Christmas spirit throughout. The complete novel by Ernest Rhys in the December "New Lippincott," under the striking title of "The Whistling Maid," is a romance of rushing interest and weird beauty, surpassing anything yet achieved by a writer of far-reaching fame. It exhales the very breath of the Welsh land in which the scene is laid, and brings back the charm of love and martial glory which characterized the days of Celtic knighthood.

A Christmas paper on "The Real Star of Bethlehem" by Julia MacNair Wright, accompanied by a frontispiece from a beautiful painting of the "Star," by Henry R. Poore; "The Return of William Penn," in December, 1699, by William Perrine, well known as "Penn;" "Washington's Death and the Doctors," by the authoritative pen of Solomon Solis Cohen, M. D.; and a delightful talk about "Alphonse Daudet and his Intimates," written by one of the latter, Jean Francois Reffaelli, the celebrated artist now in this country, comprise a contents most interesting and seasonable.
